The Stock Market

What Is Wrong? Theories Fail Here Lack Of Confidence

BY OUR FINANCIAL EDITOR

The question has often been asked: What is wrong with the stock market in Shanghai? This section is, like many other departments of commerce in this Settlement, devoid of interest, but if the theory that in dull times money finds its way to the Stock Exchange is reliable, then we should have experienced a boom in shares. In Hongkong we have seen capital diverted to speculative channels owing to the absence of opportunities of investing same in business. In Shanghai, it is just the contrary, for although trade is acknowledged to be rotten no one is anxious to operate on the Stock Exchange. In other parts of the world the Stock Exchange is considered a barometer of trade, but in Shanghai, at any rate, it is far from being so. There is so much mystery and quackery about the stock markets of Shanghai, that even the experienced gambler cannot present the slightest exposition of their vagaries and how to use them.

It is impossible to fit the theory of prices to occurrences on the Stock Exchange of Shanghai, for the latter cares more for an ounce of prophecy than for a pound of theory or history. The test of the recognised theory of price movements lies in its prophetic action under conditions beyond suspicion of human foresight. Such events as rising prices for rubber and the introduction of the Restriction Scheme and other incidents convulsed the stock market. They had the capacity of making millionaires or beggars, not through prophecy of their occurrence, but through understanding of the reaction of prices under this severest of tests.

LACK OF CONFIDENCE

The line of speculation generally precedes regularly the lines of business and banking, but in Shanghai it is not so. What is the reason for this absolute negation of the ordinary theory of security price movements? Shortly, it is lack of confidence. Those who have wandered into that dangerous neighborhood, known as the stock market, too often under guidance not motived by their welfare, or, if so, not competent always to redeem good intentions, shun it. To them the sign on the portals of the Stock Exchange is "He who enters here all hope abandon." There is no means of knowing how and why the wheels of the stock market in Shanghai go round. Those who wish to calculate the financial tides that surge the share speculative market find nothing to help them.

So respectable a writer as Jevons once associated share price tides with the spots on the sun, and sought to make the notion good by finding coincidences in the panic years with the sun spots years back to the seventeenth century. The application of this remarkable deduction to the movements on the Shanghai Stock Exchange will require considerable research work on our part or on the part of the individual undertaking it. It is doubtful if it could work under the severe tests of the Shanghai stock market, which has often experienced the most puzzling and extreme movement for many years.

NO LIFE PRESERVERS

Seamen fear the dangers of the land, as landsmen fear the dangers of the sea. There are dangers for both when they venture into unfamiliar conditions. There is no life preserver to make the Shanghai Stock Exchange safe for lambs. It is no guide to fortune for those who wish to speculate in the better sense of buying or selling under forecast, either intelligent or unintelligent of future conditions. The stock market ranks as one of the foolish tips for which many pay good money.

The truth of the matter is that the public have little or no confidence in price manipulations on the stock market. The fluctuations are mysterious, and, what is more important, the market is extremely narrow, so that a bunch of speculators—they are many times brokers—can put up or pull down prices. Probably, if the Chinese were to patronise this section, the market would assume large proportions, but the Chinese speculator has long ago thrown up the share market in disgust. He prefers to gamble in exchange. He thinks he gets a squarer deal in that pastime than from the stock market. For that reason, we cannot see how the share market in Shanghai can become an important institution.

There is room for considerable improvement, and unless things are made attractive for the speculator and investor alike it can never hope to become an important factor. There is too much of the distrust prevalent among the Chinese and also among the foreigners. The working of the machinery of the market is baffling to most. Stock manipulations in Shanghai have come to be looked upon as more like automobiles than trolley cars. Anyone can avoid automobile accidents by not

S. S. LACONIA BRINGS 700 SIGHTSEERS HERE TODAY

Big Tourist Vessel Arrives This Morning

BUSY PROGRAM

Two Parties Come Overland From Peking

Invasion of Shanghai and environs by an army of over 700 globe-trotters under "General" Frank Clark, leader of several previous crusades around the world in search of strange sights, began at 10 o'clock last night when the first regiment of sightseers from the s.s. Laconia arrived overland from the Peking sector.

The Laconia's passenger-list, which is a cross-section of Americans from the uttermost point of Maine to the farthest reaches of Florida, and from Washington's most westerly promontory to the Texas plains along the Rio Grande, is divided into three groups arriving here. Party No. 1 arrived from Peking last night. Party No. 2 arrives tonight, and the great mass of the sight-seers will arrive on the Laconia at Woosung at 9 o'clock this morning.

DUE AT 11

The first tenders from the big vessel are due at the Custom's jetty at 11 o'clock this morning and as fast as they arrive they will be divided into groups of 40 and given a ricsha tour of the Settlement, the French Concession and a peek in the Chinese City. One party of 165 will go direct to the Astor and make the ricsha trip in the afternoon.

All the Laconia's passengers will have tiffin at the Astor House at 1.15 o'clock today, and after tiffin will go on excursions to the Loongwha pagoda, and make trips through the Chinese City.

The tourists will spend today

A coolie, feeling his way along one of the murky alleyways which sneak stealthily away from Nanking Road at unexpected intervals, stumbled over something the other night and almost perished of shock when he found the obstacle to be the body of a man. When he had succeeded in slowing down to a pace at which the landscape ceased to be a slithering blur, the coolie distinguished a policeman, and halted long enough to tell the tale.

The policeman went back to the alleyway and, after a brief inspection, was about to report it a case for the coroner when the supposed corpse gave a couple of groans and rolled over. So they went to the police station instead of the morgue. As they entered the charge room it was noticed that the unconscious party had a strip of cloth wound tightly round his middle, a frayed tail of it flapping loose.

Next morning at about the time the patient was beginning to take a healthy interest in the subject of breakfast and other things and to offer a few tentative suggestions about being ready to go home, the police received a call from a godown abutting on the alleyway in which their guest had been found. A desk had been broken into and certain articles were missing, including a native bank order for Tls. 11.15, the godown owners reported and the only clew apparent was an open upper-story window, over the sill of which floated a short strip of cloth. On receipt of this word the police intimated to Ts

LUDENDORFF TELLS AIMS OF BAVARIA MONARCHISTS

German War Leader Speaks At Trial

DEFENDS REVOLT

Von Kahr Lied With Hand-Shake, He Says

(Reuter's Service)

Munich, Feb. 29.—The evidence of General von Ludendorff, in the form of a three-hour political propagandist speech, was read this afternoon before a crowded court. The witness was wearing horn-rimmed spectacles. He occasionally almost shouted his declarations. He dealt with his ambitions to separate Bavaria from the Reich and described his share in the November revolt. He declared that he was an old man, but his heart was young and beat with longing for the freedom of the people and with love of the people.

General Ludendorff denounced Marxism and Communism. He declared that he was against Jews, who should not be allowed to obtain authoritative influence in Germany any more than the English or French. He admitted that he was a monarchist, but he considered that the monarchical question could not be solved at present.

The speaker bitterly accused the ex-Dictator of Bavaria, Dr. von Kahr, and General von Lossow of acting dishonorably and of having "lied with their hand-shake." He declared with raised fist that the action of the police and troops in firing on the Nationalist bands with himself at the head was murder and disgraceful. He concluded in most lyrically:

"In spite of treachery, murder and broken promises, the Nationalist movement has been saved. We do not want a Rhine Confederation by the grace of France; we do not want a State under the influence of Marxist, Jewish or ultramontane figures, but a Germany which only belongs to Germans." The destruction of the Nationalist movement was the price paid for the reconciliation of General von

SOVIET ARRESTS MORE JAPANESE AT VLADIVOSTOK

Eight Officers Are Seized By Russ Officials; Homes Searched

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, March 1.—Despatches from Vladivostok report the arrest of eight Japanese officers and interpreters by the Russian authorities and the searching of the residences of five other Japanese officers.

Replying to a protest against the arrest of the officers, the Russian authorities stated that they were free to arrest any foreign under suspicion.

It is understood that the Government is referring the matter of the arrests to Mr. Yoshizawa, the Japanese Minister in Peking, who will seek an explanation from M. Karakhan, owing to the Russian authorities not recognising Mr. Watanabe, the Japanese Consul at Vladivostok.

(Eastern News Agency)

Tokio, March 1.—A Vladivostok telegram received at the Foreign Office reports that the chief of the State Administration of Vladivostok issued warrants on the morning of February 26 and effected the arrest of Vice Consul Goshi and Mr. Haruta, a Consular Chancellor, and also domiciliary search of the residence of Lieutenant-Commander Minotsuma and that of Captain Matsui and arrested Captain Matsui as well as Messrs. Mita and Hirai who live with Captain Matsui. So far as known up to now, fifteen Japanese residents have been subjected to domiciliary search and eight of them have been arrested.

EXTENSION OF WOMEN'S VOTE IN ENGLAND IS ADVOCATED

Bill Introduced To Amend Suffrage Laws

URGED BY LABOR

Miss Jewson Makes Maiden Speech As Seconder

(Reuter's Service)

London, Feb. 29.—The House of Commons today passed the second reading of a bill moved by Mr. W. M. Adamson, Labor Member for Cannock, Staffordshire, to amend the Representation of the People Act of 1918 with the object of enfranchising women of 21 years of age and upwards both in local government and in Parliamentary elections and placing the whole franchise for both sexes, other than University electors, on a similar basis of residence.

Miss Jewson, Labor Member for Norwich, in her maiden speech seconding the bill, spoke confidently and made her points clearly and was frequently cheered. She claimed that the experiment in the enfranchisement of women in 1918 had been amply justified. Women voted wisely and well. She ridiculed the fears of "petticoat government" by women combining to outvote the men.

The Duchess of Atholl, Conservative Member for Perth and Kinross, moved an amendment in favour of a conference of all parties to decide what further alteration in franchise was desirable. She expressed the opinion that prior to a great extension of the franchise they ought to wait until women had gained experience in local government. The bill would mean an increase of three and a half to five million voters and would give the women a majority over the men.

Mrs. Wintringham, Liberal Member for Louth, and Lady Astor, Conservative Member for Plymouth, supported the bill, which Lord Hugh Cecil, Conservative Member for Oxford University, opposed.

Mr. J. R. Clynes, the Deputy Leader of the House, said that the Government would try to find time to pass the bill if it passed.

MATSUKATA SUCCUMBS TO LONG ILLNESS

'Elder Statesman' Of Japan Dies At Capital; Twice Premier

(Reuter's American Service)

Tokio, March 1.—Prince Matsukata died today.

Prince Masayoshi Matsukata, one of the last of the "elder statesmen" of Japan, and twice premier of his country, was born in February, 1835 in Kagoshima, the fourth son of Yenzo Matsukata, a samurai of Kagoshima.

Soon after the Restoration in Japan, Prince Matsukata entered the service of his government in a minor post in the Ministry of Finance. His ability in this department gained him recognition, and in 1881 he was appointed Minister of Finance, a position which he held for more than ten years.

In 1891, he was selected to form a cabinet, and assumed the dual post of Premier and Minister of Finance. The united attack of the opposition forces, however, resulted in the downfall of his cabinet a year later.

At the opening of the Japan-China war, he was again Minister of Finance but was obliged to resign owing to difference with Prince Ito who was then premier.

Prince Matsukata's second ministry in 1896-97 was made memorable by the establishment of the gold standard of currency in Japan. From 1898 to 1900, he served as financial minister in the Yamagata Cabinet. Since July, 1903, he had been a privy councillor.

Prince Matsukata was the recipient of many honors from his country. He was created a Count in 1884 in recognition of his services as Finance Minister. In 1906 he was promoted to Marquis, and in 1922 to Prince. From 1902 to 1913, he was president of the Japan Red Cross Society. Among the decorations awarded him was the Order of the Chrysanthemum, in recognition of his meritorious services as financial advisor during the Russo-Japanese war.

(Reuter's American Service)

Washington, Feb. 29.—It was announced at the White House today that President Coolidge had under consideration the appointment of well known land attorneys as special counsel to inquire into the leasing by the government of certain sections of the Naval reserve oil lands in California to the Standard Oil Company of California. The Standard Oil Company has not previously been drawn into the oil scandal, the action taken so far being entirely with the Doheny and Sinclair interests.

(Exclusive China Press)

Washington, Feb. 29.—President Coolidge today sent to the Senate Oil Committee the income tax returns of ex-Secretary of Interior Fall, Mr. Harry Sinclair, Mr. Edward L. Doheny and the Sinclair and Doheny oil corporations.

Missing Sweep's Ticket's Discovery Causes Mix-Up

Discovery of Ticket No. 03066 in the Chinese Club Hongkong Derby Sweep last year has caused a unique situation to arise in Hongkong as a result of which the Chinese Club, having paid a Shanghai Chinese the prize of $50,000, may have to pay a Chinese woman in Hongkong another prize of the same amount.

In June last, arbitration proceedings took place between Mr. Chik Soong-ling, of Shanghai, as plaintiff, and Mrs. Violet Chan, of Hongkong, as defendant, as to the rightful ownership of the ticket. Mr. Chik Soong-ling alleged that on the day of the race Mr. Sidney Ng Quinn obtained the ticket from him in Shanghai under a pretext. On the other hand, Mrs. Violet Chan, and a number of witnesses declared that Mrs. Chan bought the ticket at a party in Arbuthnot Road in Hongkong on a certain evening some weeks before the race, when tickets in immediate sequence were also bought (and produced). The Arbuthnot Road household moved to a furnished flat in Robinson Road a few days before the Race Week; the ticket could not be found on the day of the race and it was assumed that it was lost in the "move."

The house in Arbuthnot Road has now been reconstructed, and a few days ago the household relinquished the accommodation they had been sharing with friends and removed to their new house on the old site. For lack of room in the flat, many personal effects, smaller articles of furniture, curios, etc., were stored in boxes and piled into one of the rooms of the flat, where they have remained undisturbed since they were placed there a year ago.

In unpacking these boxes a few days ago, the ticket was found, torn in pieces, with a quantity of other torn and crumpled papers which had been used for packing curios. It is supposed that one of the Chinese servants of the household, in need of more material to make the curios secure, crammed into the box the handiest collection of papers she could find and Ticket No. 03066 was amongst them.

In their award, the Arbitrators stated that they "accepted substantially" the evidence of Mr. Chik Soong-ling and his witnesses, and "entirely rejected" statements made on behalf of Mrs. Chan. As to the party at Arbuthnot Road, the Arbitrators (without stating the ground on which they based their finding) stated: "We find that a party such as described by the evidence given by and on behalf of the defendant did take place, but we are unable to accept the evidence given as to the sale and purchase (at that party) of tickets Nos. 3066 to 3070. We reject such evidence as being untrue."

RULE WAIVED

Immediately on the discovery of the ticket, a claim was made, on behalf of Mrs. Chan, for payment of the $50,000 odd, the amount of the first prize. This has been paid to Mr. Chik Soong-ling in the interval—the rule as to production of the ticket having been waived—but in July last, when it was announced that the Chinese Club intended to hand over the prize, representations were made by Mrs. Chan's solicitors (Messrs. Geo. K. Hall Brutton and Co.) pointing out that, if the award were mistaken and Mrs. Chan's case proved to be well founded, by the discovery at any time of the ticket, the Club would find itself in a difficult position and would do well to secure itself by some form of indemnity. At a general meeting of the members of the Chinese Club, an account of which appeared in the South China Morning Post of the 24th July, 1923, it was resolved, among other resolutions, that a guarantor, approved by the Club's Committee, was to guarantee the recipient (Mr. Chik Soong-ling). Funds, therefore, are available.

It is understood that proceedings for libel against the plaintiff in the Arbitration, which were announced at that time, will now be resumed; also that the Chinese Club will be called upon to reinstate Mr. Sidney Ng Quinn who, some months ago, was expelled from membership of the Club following upon the finding of the Arbitrators.

In connection with the subscription campaign, leaders of the campaign are also urging a boycott on all American goods.

ASIA BANK HAS CLOSED DOORS FOR ALL TIME

The Asia Banking Corporation, one of the principal banking institutions in the Far East, closed its doors on Friday never to reopen again.

The bank, which was recently sold to the International Banking Corporation by a sale conducted by New York officials of the two institutions, has turned over all its liabilities and assets to the I.B.C. in Shanghai and in the other China, Japan and Philippine cities in which it formerly conducted business, and practically all of the Asia's banking business has been during recent weeks absorbed by the I.B.C. or the Eastern Equitable Banking Corporation.

Mr. G. A. Tisdall, general manager for the Orient, is arriving on the President Madison to supervise the final phases of the bank's career.

Several members of the staff have already left for the United States, others are leaving shortly, and a few have formed connections with other Shanghai firms.

Probe Of Lunacy Laws In England To Be Requested

(Reuter's Service)

London, Feb. 29.—A proposal will be made that the Government should appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the Lunacy Laws as a result of a lawsuit in which a farmer named Harnett has been awarded a total of £25,000 damages against two doctors, Dr. Bond, Commissioner in Lunacy, and Dr. Adam, who has a home for mental cases.

Mr. Harnett was detained at asylums for over eight years but escaped in 1921, when specialists certified him to be sane.

The jury found that Mr. Harnett was sane when he was detained in 1912 and that reasonable care had not been exercised.

A stay of execution was granted pending an appeal.

Ludendorff Tells Of Aims Of Revolt

Lossow and General von Seeckt, between Berlin and Munich. The hopes of the enemies of Bismarckian Germany are dashed to the ground. The Nationalist movement stands erect. May it, through the blood of the martyrs of November 9, become so strong that it firmly welds the German people and so that the Reich arises, freed from the fetters of Federalism or Separatism, a Reich strong and free".

General von Ludendorff sat down amid a suppressed hum of applause.

The proceedings terminated with compliments from the Public Prosecutor, who said that the prosecution had never had the idea of calling into question the General's personal courage.

Asked by the Chief Justice how he thought things would have gone if Dr. von Kahr and General von Lossow had carried out their original intentions, General Ludendorff replied: "The movement, supported by the Nationalist organisations of the North, would have become such a mighty demonstration in the Reich that the affair would have been carried out without any act of violence".

Smiles From The Mixed Court

Yoong-kong, for that was his name, that they'd like to have him prolong his stay a bit. In the meantime a detective took a sample of the cloth that had been round Ts' waist—and found it to be a perfect match for that which fluttered from the godown window. He also found traces tending to show that there had been others besides Ts who made the descent, though evidently more successfully, from the second floor.

In the Mixed Court Ts rubbed his head dolefully and remarked that he was the unluckiest man in town. He had gone over to the godown on the previous afternoon, he said, to see a relative. He was not feeling very well and when he had climbed the stairs he was pretty much played out and feeling ill. So he sat down on a pile of sacks and, somehow or other, he fell asleep. When he woke up it was dark. He tried to get out of the place but found it locked and uninhabited and he became so badly scared that he determined on an attempt to lower himself out of the window. He tore some rags into strips and fashioned a rope. Of subsequent happenings he couldn't recall much, except that the rope wasn't a success.

It was agreed that Ts' story was a plausible yarn enough, especially in view of the fact that he really did have a relative who worked in the godown, but the narrator's record was bad—even his relative admitted it—and there were the broken desk and the missing bank order and other things. So he was returned to the police for safekeeping for two months.

The measured distance which Ts still had to travel after the rope parted was 35 feet.

$2,280 BECOMES INDISTINCT

Whether it was a sort of kindergarten Wallingford stunt or not it certainly looked good to about 44 of the local gentry who read the prospectus in the Chinese papers, and the 44 called around to get in on the ground floor.

They called on Messrs. Sung Vau-ching and Sung Sen-ming, who, according to their own modest claim, are doctors of first rate ability. The proposition, as glowingly sketched by the Drs. Sung in their interviews with the 44, consisted in the establishment of a hospital to be named the Wai Lee Hospital, which was to flourish and to eradicate the pangs and ills of mankind at the corner of Peking and Szechuen Roads and, incidentally, to declare a healthy annual dividend. All needed was a little starting capital and a staff. The idea was for the 44 to furnish both. And the 44 fell all over themselves doing it. Collectively they contributed $2,280, and were assigned posts of honor on the payroll.

Zih Tih-ming was one who interviewed the learned M. Ds. and came away smiling the smile of a man who has just been notified that an unknown steel magnate has passed definitely away, leaving his estate to the smiler. Zih has been awarded the post of "Chief of the Industrial Bureau" of the hospital. Just previous to his appointment he had deposited with the Drs. Sung $100 cash money and a promissory note for $400 more.

What connection an Industrial Bureau might have with an establishment devoted to the abolition of mumps and such was not mentioned and did not worry Zih much. He was to pull down a salary of $30 per month. This was later, for some occult reason, to be reduced to $24, but the title was to remain as high-sounding as ever. Zih was advanced $20 back out of his hundred for "locomotion," another unexplained part of his office.

Ong Kwaung-sz paid in $10 and was nominated an usher in the hospital. He was to get $15 a month.

Yih Si-tien deposited $50 and was given the post of "Inspector of Goods Expected to Arrive from Hongkong."

Then, slowly, terribly, came disillusionment.

Zih began to worry about the absence of industry to supervise, and his fund for "locomotion" was running low.

Ong hung around for ten days without a single soul to usher, and no salary advance forthcoming.

Yih's eyes were strained from looking seaward, but the goods from Hongkong did not come.

Others of the 44 likewise began to grow impatient and worried about the return on their investments. A delegation went around to call on the doctors, inviting a few policemen to go along.

The Messrs. Sung were evidently not expecting visitors. It was also evident that they were planning to take a trip somewhere, but they dropped their suitcases and decided to remain in town when the policemen implored them to tarry. A search of the place produced $31 and a few articles of furniture.

In Court the doctors admitted receiving the $2,280 and said that they had been invited to Shanghai to open the hospital by a man named Ting Gi, whom they had never seen. They thought they had been cheated and the affair was all mixed up. The Court thought so too and gave them two weeks to draw up a narrative of what had happened to the $2,280, after which the matter would be considered further.

FRENCH DOUBT SINCERITY OF GERMAN STAND

Wild Scenes Are Staged In Attack On Internal Policies

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, Feb. 29.—There were tumultuous scenes in the Chamber of Deputies today in the course of a debate on an interpellation on the Government's internal policy. The ex-Premier, M. Painleve, was dealing with alleged Royalist activities of M. Leon Daudet when the Royalist, M. Magne, shouted "Canaille." Thereupon the Left members rushed upon the Right deputies and a general melee ensued. Blows were exchanged and the sitting was suspended.

MISS RUTH ESTES TAKES HONORS IN ORATORY CONTEST

Wins First Prize In Program At American School

Miss Ruth Estes took first honors last evening in the finals of the girls' oratorical contest held at the Shanghai American School for the three prizes offered by the Scottish Rite Masonic body.

Miss Estes' oration was on the subject "The Negro Question" and besides being exceptionally well delivered showed much thought in its preparation. Second honors were awarded Miss Mary Ellen Hawk, who spoke on "America: The First Democracy," and third prize went to Miss Elizabeth Grier, whose subject was "Should America Cancel Europe's Debts?" Six orations were delivered in all, the other contestants being the Misses Irene Campbell, Margaret McLachlin and Eunice Smith.

The judges were Dr. W. W. Peter, Dr. E. M. Poteat and Miss Anne C. White. Dr. Peter presided and gave a short address and during the intervals between the orations Clisby Dubose sang a solo, accompanied by Miss Austen, and Miss Austen also sang, accompanied by Mrs. Gunn.

The finals for the boys' oratorical contest will be held on March 7.

FOREIGNER FACES FURTHER CHARGE OF FRAUD HERE

W. Wallace, an unregistered foreigner, arrested a week ago and charged with fraudulently obtaining goods to the value of Tls. 125 and $2,500 from the Nee Ching Co. and Ling Moongchen respectively during 1923, appeared in the Mixed Court before Assessor Jacobs and Magistrate Loh on another charge.

The latest charge against Wallace is that he fraudulently obtained 250 cases of brandy from Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., 24 Whangpoo Road, by proffering a worthless check on September 5, 1923. The consignment, it is claimed, was valued at Tls. 2,063.70.

Mr. E. T. Maitland appeared to prosecute and Dr. C. Fischer to defend. The latter applied for bail and when the Court suggested $5,000, said that his client could not secure this sum and asked that the case be remanded until Monday. The matter was accordingly adjourned until tomorrow.

British Lauds Future Of Brazil

(Reuter's American Service)

Rio de Janeiro, March 1.—Speaking at the farewell banquet to the British Financial Mission last night, Mr. E. S. Montagu, one of the members, declared that, after careful examination of the economic situation of the country, he considered that Brazil had extraordinary potentialities and only required capital and population combined with good government to secure an unrivalled position in the world.

siding in automobiles. No one has to expose himself to risks of loss in such bold adventures in the share market, indefensible despite the most respectable association, when the whole market is open for choice. It might be retorted that there is danger in share speculation on any Stock Exchange, but the danger in Shanghai is greater owing to the limited and restricted nature of the operations. The market is a small one and many times it is practically impossible to find ready buyers for stocks.

OLD BILL'S
Adventures in America
by Bruce Bairnsfather.

Crime Waves

"CAPTAIN!" Old Bill looked out from behind his morning paper, the front page of which was black with frenzied announcements relative to the murder for the day.

"Yes, Bill?"

"Do you know, Captain, when I first came 'ere I used to reckon the number of murders beat our English records out of sight, but as I've travelled around and 'ad a good squint at the country, and got a line on the size of it, I don't reckon it is any worse than our outfit, after all. It's just a different style, as it were."

"You interest me, Bill. I confess a casual observation of the papers gives me an impression that murders and gunmen and robberies have recently come out on this country like a rash."

"No, Captain, I think you forget the size of this 'ere place—that is why it seems more. But what I do notice is that the kind of murders are much more public."

"Public, Bill? What do you mean?"

"Well, in England they go in for private murders, murders where one feller poisons someone or other in a house and hides the result under the floor. Sometimes they murders out in a wood or some place, but never in the public way they do here."

"In fact, Bill, we have fewer gangsters!"

"That's it, Captain. We don't have any of this shooting in saloons or murders in the crowded streets, we haven't got modern highwaymen, as it were. So tell me, why do they have so much of that style over 'ere?"

"I dunno, I'm sure, Bill. One can only conjecture by one's observations, such as they are.

"It is impossible to be a gangster in London. You can try, but you'll only do it once. Most of our English robbery is bloodless. One is greatly struck by the quantity of robbery with murder over here in America."

"That's what I complain about, Captain. Take this umbrella of mine, for instance: you know the one I mean. The one with the silver top that I pinched out of the Chateau, with a photo of the King of the Belgians on the handle."

"I don't remember it, Bill, but go on."

"Well, it's wearing me out. Every time I walk out with that umbrella I have to come and lie down for a bit, exhausted from the strain. I know I'm followed. Captain! I can see the paper heading as I walk along:

UMBRELLA CAUSE,
SAYS BILL.
INDICTS GANGSTER SLAYER,
PLOT RING REVEALS.

"Bill," I said, "you are feverish. Your umbrella don't amount to anything here. You were followed by curiosity, not crime.

"Gangsters wouldn't waste their time with your umbrella or you.

"You, Bill, can only be a victim of sedate, old-fashioned English crime. You aren't interesting or smart enough to get 'High Ball Harry,' 'Down Town Daniel" or 'Finger Print Francis' or any of the star gangsters to bother about you or your umbrella.

"Of course, they might shoot you, to use you as bait, or to practice on, on Saturday night, but that's about all the danger you run.

"If you are nervous, Bill, carry a gun in your hip pocket."

"My hip pocket's full, Captain, full of that other cure for nerves."

Wedding

PHILLIPS—BURTENSHAW

Holy Trinity Cathedral was the scene of a charming wedding, yesterday afternoon when Miss Evelyn Marie Burtenshaw, daughter of the late Mr. Arthur Reaves Burtenshaw and Mrs. Burtenshaw, of Taunton, Somerset, became the bride of Mr. Thomas Phillips, son of Mr. Thomas T. Phillips. The Very Rev. Dean Symons officiated at the ceremony.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. Herbert J. Andrews, wore a white French charmeuse with an overskirt of exquisite silver lace. The bodice of the dress was very prettily trimmed with rhinestones and pearls in graduated vertical lines and the narrow cape sleeve and girdle was caught up with a beautiful star of rhinestones. A coronet of orange blossom held the tulle veil in place, and her beautiful bouquet was composed of lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaid, Miss Constance Corneck wore a charming shell pink crepe satin dress trimmed with silver roses, while she carried a basket of pink roses. Mrs. Warrington H. Corneck attended as Matron of Honor, and Mrs. Roots, wife of Bishop Roots of Hankow, in the absence of the bride's mother, attended the service and assisted at the reception, held at 9 Chaoufoong Road, the home of Capt. and Mrs. Corneck, as the oldest friend of the bride's parents.

Mr. T. Mason attended the bridegroom as his best man and Messrs. W. Houston, Phillip Corneck and Andrews performed the duties of ushers.

After the reception, at which were present many friends of both families, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips left for Hangchow, where the honeymoon is to be spent. The gift sent to the bride and bridegroom were numerous and very beautiful and included a handsome pair of silver vases from Admiral Lew and Admiral Kwong, while the Chinese staff of the Kiangwan Dock sent a silver tea set and tray and the foreign staff gave many individual presents.

HOW ONE CAN INVEST FOR PROFITS

It is comparatively easy to invest, for safety only, at low interest. But to combine safety with profits on increased value of the investment calls for sound judgement and real knowledge. The G. N. S. S. shows you "conservative" methods for making profits out of the long term fluctuations that occur in the soundest securities. We issue Savings Bonds at the value of $15.00 (Subdivided into five parts at $3.00 each) You only pay one premium.

THREE ARE GIVEN JAIL TERMS FOR BEING DISORDERLY

Hansen, Johnson And Bennet In Durance Vile

Eddie Johnson, more or less of a pugilist, made another of his famous appearances before U.S. Commissioner Nelson E. Lurton yesterday morning and walked out of the court room to spend ten days in durance vile for being drunk and disorderly.

L. Hansen, who was with Johnson when he was arrested, was also before Commissioner Lurton and was given three days in jail and assessed the costs of the action. Police testified that both Johnson and Hansen were chasing Chinese on Boone Road on Friday afternoon.

C. L. Bennet was also before Mr. Lurton on the same charge. Police gave testimony that he had hired a ricsha from Paoshan Road to Broadway and back from Broadway to Tiendong Road. He paid the coolie forty cents and created a disturbance when the coolie demanded sixty cents. He admitted he was drunk and was sentenced to ten days in jail and assessed the costs of the action.

John P. Kelly was charged with vagrancy but judgment was reserved in order to give him time to get a job or get out of Shanghai.

WOMAN IS KILLED IN TATUNG ROAD BY ARMED ROBBER

A Chinese woman was fatally shot by armed robbers in Tatung Road shortly after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, dying shortly after her admission to St. Elizabeth's hospital.

The robber gang, consisting of three men, visited the house in Tatung Road at about 1:15 p.m. The wife of the tenant was seized and a pair of bangles taken from her. A relative of hers then appeared on the scene and grabbed one of the robbers, who was stationed just outside the door, by the wrist. He threatened her with a pistol and she ran for the house. The man fired and the bullet struck her in the back. The robbers then fled.

American Woman's Club To Honor Mrs. Lobingier

By Irene Corbally Kuhn

On Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock, the women of the American community in Shanghai will gather in the rooms of the American Woman's Club to honor Mrs. Charles S. Lobingier, who is returning soon to the States.

It is quite fitting that the Shanghai club women should be hostesses to Mrs. "Judge" Lobingier, as she is familiarly known, for the greater part of Mrs. Lobingier's life has been devoted to women and women's organisations.

Instead of pursuing individual philanthropies and playing a solitaire of charity, Mrs. Lobingier has cooperated with other individuals and organisations. The result of concentrated effort has been to increase ordinary benefits a hundredfold and to spread the usefulness of public-spirited work over a larger area.

One does not hear of these things nor of other things of importance, like the organisation of a D.A.R. chapter in Manila, the founding of a woman's club there, and more, from Mrs. Lobingier. Despite her long residence in Shanghai Mrs. Lobingier is, paradoxically, one of the best-known and also one of the least known women in the city. Her quiet, unobtrusive influence has nevertheless permeated most of the useful charitable work here; it has steadied the first steps of new ideas in departmental work in the American Woman's Club—ideas that have represented a steady cultural and social growth in the life of the women of the community.

One hears of these things from old residents and old friends who remember that Mrs. Lobingier was first interested in club work in Omaha. There, they will tell you, she worked for better conditions in juvenile institutions, affiliated herself with state organisations and men's clubs, since she was wise enough to see that women and men should work together, with the state, for the public weal. They will tell you too, that she was three times delegate from Omaha to the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Then there is the chapter on Manila when Mrs. Lobingier was affiliated with the Fortnightly Club, the first women's club organised in Manila which was specially interested in the history and art of the Orient in much the same way that the Literary Department of the American Woman's Club in Shanghai is interested. When Mrs. Lobingier, seeking an outlet for her charitable and serving inclinations, organised the Manila Women's Club, her thought was to aid the Bureau of Health. The social service department of the club established a day nursery for the babies of Filipino mothers employed during the day. This department also interested itself in starting lace-making among women prisoners in Bilibid. A portion of the money earned from the sale of this prison-made lace was kept for the prisoners until their release so that they would have something upon which to start afresh.

When Mrs. Lobingier talks of her club work at all it is chiefly of Shanghai and of her pleasant memories of past events and of the splendid co-operation of the women. Knowing her inclinations toward service and her quiet way of putting these inclinations to work thinking people here who have heard Mrs. Lobingier express sincere regret that she has not been able to do more, breathe silent wishes that just a few members of the foreign community would do half as much.

On the eve of her leaving Shanghai after a residence of more than a decade, Mrs. Lobingier was reminiscing a bit. One of her pleasantest memories, it was revealed, was when she was chairman of the Philanthropic Committee of the A.W.C. This was before the organisation of the nine different departments, when there were only social, philanthropic and music sections. As chairman of this committee, Mrs. Lobingier was hostess several afternoons a week to the American children of the community who came to her home to make picture books and little children's gifts for the children in the hospitals.

Another pleasant memory is associated with Mrs. Lobingier's third term as president of the American Woman's Club, in 1920-1921. It was during this year that the club celebrated its "coming of age" party and rounded out a 21 year cycle of useful activity. On the day of the celebration there were many American guests. Several of these visitors were old friends of Mrs Lobingier who had met them previously when she had twice represented the Shanghai A.W.C. at the biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

In addition to her work in the A.W.C. Mrs. Lobingier has been prominently identified with the Shanghai College Club, the Foreign Women's Home, and the Y.W.C.A.

Municipal Orchestra

Mrs. Isenman is to be the soloist at today's Town Hall concert. She will sing two beautiful numbers—Manon's Air from the second act of Puccini's opera, and the famous Willow Song and Ava Maria from Verdi's "Otello". The orchestral items will include three excerpts from Wagner's masterpiece, "Tristan and Isolde"—the Prelude to the opera, the wonderful love-duet, and the ecstatic Love-Death of Isolde.

On Thursday next the Sixth Subscription Concert will take place at 9.15 p.m. Mrs. Isenmen will again be the soloist, but on this occasion with an Air from Charpentier's "Louise", and the French songs of Duparc. The orchestra will be responsible for Ravel's brilliant "Rapsodie Espagnole" and the impressionistic Symphonic Poem "La Mer" by Debussy. No less in importance will be the Berlioz "Fantastique Symphony". Truly an unusually tempting program.

Compromise Tax Bill Voted In U.S.

(Reuter's American Service)

Washington, Feb. 29.—The House of Representatives, after rejecting by 261 votes to 153 the Republican proposal to restore the so-called Mellon Tax Bill instead of the Garner Democratic Tax Reduction Bill, adopted by 216 votes to 199 a compromise measure proposed by Mr. Nicholas Longworth, Republican (Ohio), making the maximum surtax 37½ percent (as compared with the Garner proposal of 44 percent and the Mellon proposal of 25 per cent). The Longworth Bill will reduce the nominal tax on small incomes from 4 to 2 percent.

"Mrs. Dot"

The Dramatic Section of the B. W. A. is to be heartily congratulated upon the success of its production of Somerset Maugham's delightful comedy "Mrs. Dot." The Lyceum Theater was comfortably filled last night and showed very decidedly that the audience was pleased with the goods offered. Act one opened up with most of the players seemingly rather nervy. It was very natural. But as soon as they got into their stride the comedy went with a swing that appealed to all. If one would be hyper-critical faults could be found in places. There was a good deal of masking that might have been avoided, but to take the show on the whole, we can have nothing but nice things to say.

If the play's the thing, then the B. W. A. is fortunate in its choice. Those ladies who were responsible for its production are to be very heartily congratulated again. Mrs. Henry Jory, as producer, received a generous call. Mrs. K. E. Newman certainly calls for acknowledgment. The settings throughout the three scenes were perfect. Scene Two was really one of the best we have looked upon for some time. Dresses and mounting made a harmonious whole. Talking about dresses, let it be said at once that we have seldom seen such costumes. Mrs. Yorke Irwine and Mrs. Alister Campbell passed from one creation to another until they simply surpassed themselves in the wonderful costumes that they wore in the last act. And they knew how to carry them.

Mrs. Irwine had most of the work to do in this play. We have seen her many times before, and except for a spasm in the first act, when she was probably sensing her audience, she gave a capital portrayal of the tantalising illusive and lovable "Mrs. Dot." Mrs. Alister Campbell was finely cast as "Lady Sellinger." She has never done anything better on our local stage. She spoke well, and was heard in all parts of the theater. She dressed her part well and she fitted it as well as her costumes fitted her—that is saying, in short, that she was well nigh perfect. Miss Aline Noble calls for a special word of praise. This was her first prominent part on the stage. She acquitted herself splendidly. Her enunciation was very good, and her little scenes with Mr. Collar were both charming and effective. Quite a nice study was also given by Mrs. A. Michael in the part of "Miss Eliza MacGregor."

Before passing to a review of the men it must be said that they took second place in more ways than one. The ladies dressed so well that all the men, with the exception of Mr. A. E. Seddon, looked shabby. That is quite enough about that.

Mr. E. R. Morrison had but a little to do, and that in the first act. He got across well and gathered in all the laughs that his lines called for. He is an excellent character actor. By the way, and just in a whisper—his make-up calls for a little attention. It is difficult to see the back of the head, and when a man has a mass of nice wavey hair it is almost impossible for him to convince the audience that he is a grey headed old buffer.

I think the best man in the show was Mr. McMurray. He still has that little fault of letting his head lead the way. He will probably tumble to what I am getting at. But apart from that he was really good. He got his lines over well and thoroughly deserved the appreciation that the audience showed in no uncertain manner. Mr. Collar calls for next notice. He is a regular Owen Nares when it comes to the juvenile stuff. His scenes with Miss Noble were most convincing. He looked well, and after Mr. Seddon he was the best dressed man on the stage. Mr. C. C. King had a difficult part. I think he was wrongly cast. He did his best to look the part, but just missed it. He speaks nicely but at times a trifle too quickly. He sensed his character, but did't quite reach up to it. Mr. Seddon had little to do. Apart from his make-up in act one he would pass muster—but that hectic flush on one cheek and too much blue on the other detracted from his portrayal. Mr. J. H. Johnstone provided quite a neat study as the tailor.

All in all the B.W.A. production of "Mrs. Dot" calls for hearty support, and is thoroughly enjoyable. It is given on behalf of the King's Daughters and B.W.A. funds. The play is to be repeated tomorrow night and on Tuesday. The play calls for filled houses.

How Germans Live Today

(From our own Correspondent)

Bremen, Jan. 24.—To judge of the extent to which people formerly of good position in Germany are now suffering, is not always easy. The middle-class here as elsewhere, is stoical in adversity.

The disappearance of gentle-folk from the streets is a phenomenon observable in many of the big towns. There are smartly dressed people about—too smartly dressed—it is just that which gives them away. But the people—not always the smartest perhaps—whose every movement expressed good breeding, are noticeably absent from the streets nowadays. Where are they? It is often difficult to find out.

Today in Germany one does not know how one's intimate friends live. Invitations have become rarer. You don't ask each other to meals of bread and margarine with tea of the color of dish-water. Your invitations are given when Liebesgaben have arrived and for once in a way there are butter and sausages, while a gift of tea allows of a stronger decoction than usual.

To your friends in the country your coming, they will tell you, is a festival. They are practically exiles, for inability to pay train fares keeps them and their friends apart. They live, in one particular instance, by giving lessons to the peasants' children in return for bread, flour and bacon. Their small amount of cash has to be hoarded carefully for fuel, light, taxes. They save coal by fetching sticks and pine cones from the woods. To save electric light they go to bed every night at 8.

THE FATTED PIG

They insist, nevertheless, on bringing out the "fatted calf" (it is generally pig) for your benefit and they make merry. When you leave you have an uncomfortable feeling that they will have to starve for six weeks afterwards to make up for it. These are people whose pre-war income of 20,000 marks (about 5,000 dollars) has been reduced to nothing by inflation.

With health and strength on their side the New Poor of the cultured middle-class face life and its hardships with extraordinary courage. They chaff each other about their difficulties—the endless waiting in the understaffed shops—their economies with coal—their servantless menage.

It is not the drudgery that they mind so much as the fact that their lives are being frittered away in a succession of small activities which leave no time for things of the mind.

But, as they sadly confess if they had the time there is no money now for the magazine or review which kept one in touch with the intellectual movements of the day. No money for an occasional theater or concert. In some cases even the daily paper has had to be given up. Intercourse with friends languishes, stamps being too dear for much letter-writing.

It is when people have left middle-age behind them that the tragedy begins. There are the military men, often of high rank, with reduced pensions. There is the civil official who after 40 years' service has to live on 200 marks (about 40 dollars) a month instead of 500. There are the small investors, the widows of doctors and professional men.

MISERY AND PRIDE

Such cases can only be helped by private charity. And it is when you talk to those who are organising aid for these people, that you realise how widespread the misery is in every section of the middle-class in Germany. You learn too, how difficult it is to help, with what tact and fine feeling you must probe the wounds which pride so carefully conceals.

And the remedy?

There is none. You can alleviate such poverty, but you cannot restore their prosperity. Nor can you prevent the broken-hearted among them from finding refuge in self-destruction. That is the fate of many of whose death the public never hears.

Under inflation the working-class as a whole, was not so badly off. There was little unemployment and the aristocracy of Labor had little of which to complain. Now the Nemesis of inflation has overtaken the workers and unemployment and reduced wages are bringing evil days to many.

Still the tendency to represent working-class suffering as wholly due to the War and its aftermath is a mistake. Germany in common with all industrial countries, had unemployment and suffering among her working-class in periods of her greatest prosperity.

Working-class misery is easier to alleviate than that of the middle-class. Great organisations national and international, are ready with their help. Underfed children are sent to Denmark and Switzerland to be fattened up. The sorely-tried middle-class, despite their own difficulties, are made to help indirectly by higher rates being levied for their gas, their water and their electric light.

THE WEALTHY CLASS

And what of Germany's wealthy class?

Hard things are being said of it just now. Yet the 1259 Germans who were found in Switzerland in the last days of December, are after all, but a small percentage of a population of sixty millions. They excuse themselves for going there on the ground that prices at German watering-places and pleasure resorts are prohibitive.

Whether their accusation that German hotel-keepers are responsible for the indignant criticism passed on them by foreign newspapers, is well-founded is impossible to say.

Considering the condition of so many of their countrymen, it would have been better taste on their part to have shown more restraint in spending on pleasure at a time when foreign countries, themselves hard hit, are appealing for help to save starving Germany.

Ostentatious wealth was never so out of place among Germans as it is today.

Our Bremen Letter

(From Our Special Correspondent)

Bremen, Jan. 24.—Melancholy tempered by hope was probably the prevailing mood of the crowds who thronged the churches on the 18th to celebrate Bismarck's foundation of the German Empire. That unity which he created and maintained by his forceful personality is today far to seek. Pity Bismarck cannot look down from Valhalla on the ruin of his work and tell us what flaws there were in its structure to account for its early collapse!

FRAULEIN OTTILLE HOFFMANN

Bremen Democrats felt the occasion a fitting one to make Fraulein Hoffmann an honorary member of their Union. Almost ninety, yet fresh and vigorous in mind, Fraulein Hoffmann's memories go back to the days of the wars of freedom in Germany. Her name is associated in Bremen with her doughty fight against the drink evil. Bremen has not yet got the length of prohibition. Germans must be prepared gently for such measures. But her various temperance bodies are doing good work in fighting the abuse of alcohol.

AMERICA MAKES CHILDREN HAPPY

It was a charming idea of the Stewards' Department of the U. S. steamer America to give a treat to the children of the poor belonging to Lehe, Bremerhaven and Geestemunde. How the small folk must have enjoyed their feast in the Volksgarten at Bremerhaven, waited on by the stewards and stewardesses themselves! How impressed too, the older ones amongst them must have been to hear that the President of the United States himself had written to the head steward, Mr. Schickle, saying how delighted he was to hear that the children were to have such a good time.

WESER BLAZE

Great sympathy is felt with the Weser Company. A fire which broke out in their carpentering department has destroyed a great part of the furniture and fittings in preparation for the new steamers Trier and Coblenz.

BREMEN AND BROADCASTING

Bremen is following the progress of wireless in other countries with great interest and is hopeful of soon having a broadcasting station of her own. The inhabitants are being urged to buy themselves wireless sets and installations. Not long ago some favored individuals heard Aida broadcast from the London Opera and were delighted with their experience.

NEWSPAPER CARRIES THE DAY

It is significant of the times that while the Bremen Town Library has no funds for magazines and reviews of a serious nature, last Sunday's edition of the Bremer Nachrichten consumed a truck-load or 10,000 kilograms of paper. The newspaper proudly announces that its single pages laid together at their narrow margin would cover a distance of 505 kilometres, as far as from Bremen to Strassburg, as the crow flies.

FAR EAST FROLICS

On Jan. 17th the Ostasiatischer Verein held its annual dinner in the spacious assembly rooms of the Jacobi Halle. Her Specht, the senior member and President, took the Chair or rather the Chair took his rotundity. Over five hundred members, including visitors from Hamburg, cheered the curry prepared by mine Hostess, Frau Kalb. No Scotch haggis could have had a more enthusiastic reception. The familiar odours of chutney, macassar fish and Bombay duck brought back memories of happier days. Afterwards toast followed toast and towards the small hours of the morning the feast developed into a regular smoking concert, recitations and songs alternating with beer and cocktails.

GERMANY'S SUICIDAL TENDENCIES

Graf Keyserling, head of the School of Wisdom at Darmstadt is a strikingly stimulating lecturer. No wonder that when he spoke here the other day on Germany and her future he had a large and interested audience. The Count has his own point of view. He sees the world through the eyes of the artist rather than those of the scientific historian. Such speakers and writers are challenging in their methods, startling the public by their novel and sometimes bizarre ideas.

The Count threw down the glove to those in Germany who want to restore what is dead and gone. Better build anew on fresh foundations. His assertion that Germany as a nation has shown unconscious tendencies to suicide has been interpreted by some as applying to Social Democratic activities. More propbably Graf Keyserling was thinking of the centrifugal tendencies of the extreme parties of both the Right and the Left. Until all factions in Germany sink their differences progress in rebuilding will be slow.

RUSSIA PROGRESSES IN CIVILISATION

A most interesting lecture was given here the other day at the Geographical Society by Dr. Obst of the Technical High School at Hanover. Germans have a keen interest in Russia and they heard with astonishment of her tremendous strides in civilisation. So novel are her methods, for instance in peat producing, that German engineers take lessons in them from her. Electricity works are springing up everywhere. Soon not a peasant's house in the land will be without electric light. Dr. Obst is starting to study Russia at first hand and has promised Bremen an account of his experiences on his return. It will be interesting to learn from him whether along with electric light, other much-needed improvements have found their way into Russian cottages. Electric light unaccompanied by certain necessary adjuncts of civilisation reminds one of a savage in a top hat and a loin-cloth.

A LETTER FROM LONDON

Awkward Are The Drinking Laws—The World's Most Famous Family —Varied Attractions At London Theaters—The Rise Of Labor

(By Our Own Correspondent)

London, Jan. 18.—London's dispensers of liquid refreshments with a kick may do so lawfully within certain hours only. The "open season" varies in different districts, depending upon the local magistrates.

Usually, the "time off" for drinks is from noon to 3 p.m. and from 5.30 to 10.30 p.m. But these hours are by no means uniform. Some places open and close earlier than others.

On one side of Oxford Street, intoxicants may be served until 10 p.m. only, but across the street such refreshments can be had until 11 p.m. In one place it is lawful, in the other unlawful.

This is a "hang-over" from the War. The whole thing is so unjust and ridiculous that there is now no difference of opinion as to the desirability for reform. A Bill is now pending in the House of Commons to establish uniformity in the closing of all public houses in the London area.

These closing hours are viewed by the "Pussy-foots" to be the beginning of ultimate prohibition in England. Some boroughs 'n Scotland are already dry and the question of prohibition is frequently an issue in the Scottish elections.

Still, restricted drinks are better than prohibited drinks, and for this reason it is better to live in London than in New York.

SMITHS ARE WORLD'S MOST FAMOUS FAMILY

The "Smiths" are the worlds most famous family. Their number is legion. Every civilised land has its army of Smiths, in various guises, from the Russian "Skmithowski" to the Mexican "Smitli" and the name is held in honor everywhere.

In the British Isles, the Smiths head the clan list. Even Jones and Brown must pay their homage to them. In England 1 person out of 72 is a Smith, and in Scotland the proportion is still greater—1 to every 70—while in Ireland the name Smith takes fifth place on the list.

Of the Smiths in the United Kingdom, boys and bachelors number 162,000, Spinsters 167,000 (enough to go around) while 189,000 are married, for better or for worse. There are 23,000 widows, many of them rich and good looking, and 9,000 widowers who can still do the 19th hole.

A glance at "Who's-Who" reveals the name Smith, with achievments, by the hundred. Three Smiths, including an ex-Lord-Chancellor, appear on the roll of peers, which also includes a Smith-Barry. There are eight Smith baronets, not counting a Smyth and a Smythe.

The name Smith is everywhere very common, yet very respectable. However, some people think it is more respectable to add a prefix, such as "Montague"-Smith, etc.

The Smiths also abound on the Continent, and perhaps in China, but their names are too difficult to spell in English.

A GOOD WAR PLAY SHOWN IN LONDON

Plays having to do with the Great War are generally supposed to be unpopular. "Old Bill," as well as several other attempts, has failed to win a permanent place as the great war play.

Now at the Haymarket Theater is a play all about the war. "Havoc" by Mr. Harry Wall, seems destined to be awarded the distinction of the great war play triumph of 1924. The war is the whole background of this play, the beginnng and the end of it, and the tragedy of the play is based on the fact of the War.

Its reception at the first night, January 16, was the most enthusiastic that has been recorded in London for many a day. Although one can scarcely believe a word of the play, yet all seem tremendously interested and greatly pleased with this intense entertainment.

The play is in four parts; acts one and four are in England, acts two and three in France. The characters are divided into two portions—as in the pantomime—the "mortals" are the women, the "immortals" are the men. One of the mortals, a pure creation of the war, who had a rousing time, starts by breaking hearts and ends by causing the death of one lover and the blindness of another.

The immortals are pictured in their billets, etc., happy as school boys, yet doing rather more than a man's job.

"Havoc" is likely to have a long and successful run and the Repertory Players, as well as the author, are to be complimented upon having first given it a production.

MORAL: 'LIKE IS HAPPIER WITH LIKE'

"Like is happier with like"—is the moral of "The Flame" produced at Wyndham's Theater this week.

"La belle Ceo"—a Parisian music-hall artiste, in early life has a son by an Englishman, Lord Blantyre. The peer takes the child away and brings up in his own circle. After leading the life of a demi-mondaine for nearly twenty years, the mother feeling the flame of maternal instinct, seeks out the boy at his father's home, but, after a stormy scene with the old peer, is forced to depart. This scene hastens the death of the old peer, and after his father's death, the son decides to seek out his mother and try to save her.

He finds her in a regrettable situation in a cabaret. After a heart to heart talk together, the mother decides to relinquish her none too respectable life, and to accompany her son, and, after a stormy scene with her foul-mouthed lover, the mother and son depart on a tour of the fashionable continental resorts.

However, the mother soon realises that she is very much out of place, whilst the son is forced to admit that he finds her very much of an encumbrance. Finally, in order that she may not stand in the way of her son's prospects of marriage, the mother secretly packs up and departs, returning to her lover at Paris.

The part of the mother is finely depicted by Miss Violet Vanbrugh, and a strong cast assists to make this a very powerful play.

LABOR MOVEMENT OLD IN BRITAIN

Britain's Labor Government is new but the labor movement in this country is not new. As far back as 1868 the London Workingmen's Union ran a few candidates for Parliament, but without success.

The first Labor members were elected in 1874, including a Mr. Alexander Macdonald, but they were really Liberals with labor sympathies. The Socialist teachings, of Ruskin, Henry George, Karl Marx and others, were taking root in Britain and in 1892 Mr. Keir Hardie was elected to Parliament by a London district in defiant independence of the old parties.

In 1900 another independent labor member joined Mr. Hardie and thenceforward the Labor Party was to be reckoned with as a potential factor in British politics.

The following table shows the growth of the Labor Party in Britain from 1900 to the present day—

Year	Candidates	Total votes	M.P.'s
1900	15	62,698	2
1906	50	323,195	29
1910 (Jan.)	78	505,690	40
1910 (Dec.)	56	370,802	42
1918	361	2,244,945	57
1922	414	4,236,733	142
1923	420	4,348,379	192

Ulster In 1924: Bright Outlook

Free State And Ulster Reconciled

(From Our Special Correspondent)

Belfast, Jan. 24.—The outlook for 1924 is the brightest Northern Ireland has seen for many years.

The troubled years of civil war are over and practically forgotten. North and South, under their respective governments, are reconciled and satisfied. The ill-feeling, which for so long existed between the people of Ulster and those of the Free State, has to a great extent disappeared.

Ulster is content to tolerate the Free State, providing the Free State does not attempt to interfere with Ulster. That the two parties will unite, and harmonise, is at present beyond the hopes of the most ardent of optimists.

Under the separate Governments, however, harmony reigns, even to a certain extent between Protestants and Catholics. Many Catholics, who two years ago were expelled from the Northern shipyards, are now working amicably with the Protestants in their former positions.

Belfast, two years ago the scene of strife and bloodshed, is now as peaceful and prosperous a city as any in England. Most of the damaged buildings have been replaced or repaired, and few traces of the recent fighting are to be found.

The curfew, which previously demanded that all persons should be within doors at dusk and not out again before 8 a.m., is now extended to midnight and 5 a.m. A special grant permitting the extension of this curfew until 2 a.m. was made for Christmas and the New Year in order that late services might be held in the churches.

The fact that this same grant was put forward last year and failed and this year succeeded, is in itself evidence of the improved state of the country.

Business and industry were never in a more healthy condition. Orders are pouring into the shipyards and there is constant need for more employment. It is estimated that the unemployment in Ireland is relatively less than that of England, and it is constantly decreasing.

Gallaher's has now become one of the largest tobacco factories in the United Kingdom and is producing tobacco of a kind far superior to many of the large British firms. Here there is a constant demand for more workers, as the business grows continually larger.

The linen industry continues to flourish, and Ulster upholds the reputation it has ever held for producing the world's finest lined.

The boycott which the Free State put on Ulster manufacturers, has recently been removed, and commercial travellers report that they are now doing more business in the South than was expected in these circumstances.

This again bears out the statement that there is little ill-feeling between North and South, a fact due largely to the earnest activities of Sir James Craig and his efficient government.

Sir James was recently granted the Freedom of Derry, an honor which falls to few indeed; but great though this honor is, it is but a small token of the gratitude which all Ulster feels towards its capable Prime Minister.

An Interesting Watch

Not long ago an American multi-millionaire brought his watch to us for repair. In addition to the usual hour and minute hands this watch had split second hands, a striking mechanism which strikes the exact hour and minute of time whenever a lever is pressed, a calendar mechanism with three hands showing the month of the year, the day of the month and the day of the week as well as a revolving disc showing the phase of the moon. Although the movement is in an ordinary gold case, the watch is worth Taels 1,500. The repair charges amounted to M. $5.00.

Our charges for repairs are commensurate with services rendered rather than the value of the watch or the Dunn or Bradstreet rating of the owner.

Policies Of Premier Ramsay Macdonald

Just before the fall of Stanley Baldwin in England and when it become evident that J. Ramsay Macdonald was to be his successor, Albert Hall, London, was packed one evening to hear the new Premier deliver a speech in which he outlined his policy. Following is his address, as reported in the Manchester Guardian:

A sudden change has come upon our outlook. We are on the threshold of government. We may be called upon within the next few days to take upon our shoulders the responsibility of office. We shall do it. Why? Not because we want it. His any heir been so foolish as to hasten off the stage of this mortal life a father of his who is going to hand him over bankrupt estate? If there be such a one he is not to be found in the Labor party.

Why will we take office? Because we are to shirk no responsibility that comes to us in the course of the evolution of our movement. We are a party of idealists. We are a party that away in the dreamland of imagination dwells in the social organisation fairer and more perfect than any organisation that mankind has ever known. That is true, but we are not going to jump there. We are going to walk there. We are upon a pilgrimage, we are on a journey. One step is enough for me. One step. Yes, on one condition—that it leads to a next step.

Now I see that our friends of the press—having very little knowledge about us supply the gaps of their ignorance by a very prolific imagination—are telling you all sorts of stories. They tell you, for instance, that we are just going to take office in order to prepare for a general election. Nothing of the kind. I give you this guarantee if you want it. We are not going to take office in order to prepare for a general election. We are going to take office in order to do work.

I will give you another guarantee if you want it. They tell us that we are going in to indulge in some sort of heady, reckless transaction or other which in the end will only add to our confusion and our dislocation. We are going to inherit a bankrupt estate, and they tell us that instead of nourishing that estate, ploughing it, harrowing it, sowing it, tending it, encouraging its growth, we are only going to increase its bankruptcy. There is nothing further from the truth than that statement.

THE FIRST GREAT DUTY

The first great duty we put our hands to is to establish peace and create the conditions of peace. Today they talk about war being over. Why, there is not a capital city in Europe today but is nourishing and cherishing the live embers of the late war. There is not a capital city today but contains somewhere embers which a fresh-blowing wind will scatter over the inflammable material in Europe and will start a new war. My colleagues and myself want to go to office with a broad foot and a big heel to stamp upon every one of those embers—so that whether we be six months in office or six years or six decades, there shall not be in any corner of Europe fires which can be fanned into a great flame to involve the old world in new wars.

The quarrel, if it can be called such, the misunderstandings, the pinpricks, the irritations going on between France and ourselves are absolutely deplorable. They are unworthy of both countries. They do not issue from the minds of the good people of either countries. It would be a great thing today if we could only do it, to put them all behind us: to establish with France, Italy, Russia, Germany, Czechoslovakia—all peoples of the nations—an understanding not of rival military forces but an understanding of human men and women who have no cause for war, no cause for enmity.

I believe that a Labor party occupying Downing street, staffing our government, is the one thing required to give strength to the morally courageous and power to the peace forces of all sections of Europe. That is our first great task.

RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

In connection with that we shall do our best to complete the structure of the League of Nations, to use it without reserve as the main instrument for securing international justice, and thereby creating the conditions of international peace. The pompous folly of standing aloof from the Russian government will be ended. Ended not because we agree with what the Russian government has done. That is not our business. I would like to know when a Liberal or Tory government in its international relations always drew the line at governments for whose every act they were prepared to make themselves responsible. I want trade, I want negotiations, I want a settlement from the coasts of Japan to the coast of Ireland. If I have to protest against what is being done in Afghanistan, how can I protest unless I have channels to use for my protest?

UNEMPLOYMENT

Then there is a great question that affects us at home, mixed up inexplicably with foreign affairs, the question of unemployment. I believe myself that every decent-minded man and woman in this country is unhappy about this question. I believe that every decent-minded man and woman would welcome a government producing a solution for it, a well-thought-out, a scientific scheme for meeting this problem. I believe that the governments hitherto have failed to do their duty regarding this problem.

We want greater care first of all in understanding what the problem meant. In that we will discover that the root of it is the lower purchasing power of the mass of the consumers in this land. They have neglected to develop normal trade, as was shown by Sir Alan Smith's letter of protest addressed a few months ago to the Tory government. They have allowed human material to deteriorate—the child from the school to be put on the streets; men of skill and women of skill coarsened, hardened, stiffened by lack of practice. Ah! my friends, for the first time in the history of this country a labor government, a labor department staffed by men of labor experience, and women of labor experience—experience and knowledge, spirit, insight and capacity to put themselves in the shoes of the unemployed and the unemployed children, for the first time such an administrative staff will consider the problem of unemployment from the human point of view and not merely from the wage-earning point of view.

HOUSING CRUSADE

An esential part of that is housing. Again, how can the people, for instance, who live within a stone's throw of this hall, if they know anything at all, go to bed tonight having said their prayers in sincerity of spirit declaring that God is the Father common to them and to the people of Mile End—how can they, after their religious exercise, go to sleep comfortably whilst men, women, young men and maidens, and children are all huddled together in one room tonight; while there are homes, so called, that have not a cheery and comfortable fireside; while young men and women who are just married and in whose minds the glorious glow of love is still undimmed have got to face poverty, deprivation, dirt, sordidness. Ah, my friends, there is no section of the community that ought to rise up with a more flaring moral indignation against our housing conditions than the people who live round hereabouts.

They are not lost. The fact is, they are not touched. I want to touch them. I want them to feel as we feel. I want them to relate their spiritually religious professions with their actual conditions of life. Then in a great effort that we shall make to supply houses nobody will be more loyal behind us than those people who have not experienced the problem themselves, but who in their heart of hearts know what a miserable lot they would be if they were brought up under surroundings such as we want to change. I want a crusade in which there will be no distinction, a crusade that will give us houses, houses, houses all the time, until we have enough houses to put the people in.

And I want to say here and now that whatever guarantees are required in order to enable a maximum production of houses to be made we are prepared to give them. I am also prepared to do this—and I am sure my colleagues will heartily cheer this—if we find that trusts, monopolies, corners in any of the essential materials for building are standing in our way we shall break them.

I have no intention of delivering a program speech—nor have I done it. If I had I should have had to deal with the ex-service men; I should have had to deal with widows; I should have had to deal with old-age pensioners. But what I have done tonight is this: I have tried to show you the spirit in which the labor government, if it comes into being, will carry on its work, and I have used one or two big things as an illustration of how we would apply that spirit.

As I say, I am not thinking of party. I am thinking of national well-being. I want a labor government to repair the damage that has been done since 1914 to the homes, minds, the education and the politics of our people. I want to encourage promising growths making for peace, for happiness and for contentment in the world. Human beings cannot be content whilst they are suffering injustice, and the man who declares for contentment declares for everything. He knows what he means.

I want a labor government, so that the life of the nation may be carried on. Nineteen twenty-four is not the last in God's program of creation. My friends, we will be dead and gone and forgotten and generation after generation will come, and there will still be the search for the Holy Grail by knights like Keir Hardie. The shield of love and the spear of justice will still be in the hands of good and upright men and women, and the ideal of a great future will still be in front of our people. I see no end, thank God, to these things. I see my own horizon, I see my own skyline, but I am convinced that when my children of children's children get there there will be another skyline, another horizon, another dawning, another glorious beckoning from heaven itself. That is my faith, and in that faith I go on and my colleagues go on, doing in their own lives what they can to make their addition, to contribute something substantial to the well-being, the happiness and the holiness of human life.

With Enforcement A National Issue, Many See Pinchot As The Logical Man For Presidency

He Says, However, 'Cleaning Up The Mess At Harrisburg Is Job Enough' And Talks Only Of Pennsylvania

BY BOYDEN SPARKES

There are politicians who say that the frontier of the coming struggle for the Presidency will be railroads. There are others who contend that the big issue will be the world court and the League of Nations. Some hold that tax reduction will capture the voters' attention, but there are others who hope that the real fighting question will be prohibition. If it should be prohibition, then the logical candidate of this group would be Gifford Pinchot.

If such an event should come to pass, then one might answer the prayerful question of the spectacled, white-haired negro who for generations of Governors of Pennsylvania has bowed visitors into the executive offices into the State House at Harrisburg. This old fellow, who walks with the perky steps of a man with sore feet, perspired in a polite silence through the first strenuous days of Governor Pinchot's term. The campaign had been fought over the Pinchot promise to enforce prohibition and to clean up the mess at Harrisburg."

Gifford Pinchot.

CUT PAY ROLL FOR DAYS

The new Governor was cleaning up. The corridors of the $15,000,000 state house echoed to the footsteps of protesting politicians whose most earnest workers had been dislodged from sinecures. The exodus of discharged employees may not rank with the great human migrations of history, but nevertheless it was a formidable movement of its kind. For days the new Governor kept scratching names off the state's pay roll—and they were Republican names, and Governor Pinchot is a Republican; don't forget that. The negro messenger of the executive offices for many days was in the midst of something closely akin to a run on a bank. Politicians, mouthing threats and pleas, swarmed in the reception room. At the end of a couple of weeks, what with the soreness of his feet and the unorthodox behavior of the new Governor, his dignity forsook him.

"Mah Lord!" he exclaimed, "how long's thus yere gonna keep up?"

It would be easy to answer his query if anyone might say positively that Gifford Pinchot was a candidate for the Presidency. But no one can say except Gifford Pinchot, and he will not.

"I'm Governor of Pennsylvania," he says, "and that's job enough for any man."

But is it? Is the issue that he regards as of the utmost importance in Pennsylvania a national issue? Certainly it is a national question, this business of law enforcement.

TALKS ONLY OF HIS STATE

"We're getting a steadily increasing body of people to recognise the fact that the crime of bootlegging is the same as any other crime," he said to me in his office a few days ago. By agreement we were discussing Pennsylvania, and not the United States. But when Governor Pinchot addressed Civil War veterans last Memorial Day in the cemetery at Gettysburg undoubtedly he was embracing more territory. Then he said:

"In your day slavery was the enemy that attacked the Constitution of the United States and the integrity of the nation. In our day another evil has undertaken to declare its independence of the will of the majority and to impose its shackles on the people of the United States. You in your time conquered those who attempted to impose the black disgrace of human bondage upon the free states. It is our task to overcome those who would impose the black disgrace of nullification on the people of the Union which you preserved."

Gifford Pinchot is Governor of Pennsylvania, but he is something more; he is an American, and it is impossible to examine his record of public service without believing that he will be thoroughly discontented if he is not permitted to wage his crusade against bootlegging over all the country. Already there have been what might be termed expeditions that seem to be part of such a crusade. One was his statement issued to newspapers last October in which he referred to the request of President Coolidge for the co-operation of Governors in the enforcement of prohibition.

"The present orgy of lawlessness," said Mr. Pinchot, is utterly unnecessary. The Federal government has the right to give or refuse a permit to make or dispose of beer, liquor or alcohol in any form, and to prescribe its conditions."

HINTS AT STERNER RULE

That statement seems to indicate that Gifford Pinchot feels that he would behave differently than Calvin Coolidge does toward the problem of prohibition enforcement if he were in Calvin Coolidge's shoes. This thought seems to peer out at you from between the lines of most of his speeches—and he has made a good many. Take, as an example, his address to the Allegheny County Ministerial Association in Pittsburgh early in December.

"The basis of civilisation," he told them, "is obedience to law. Encouragement of law breaking is the most direct and violent form of attack on our institutions. The Eighteenth Amendment has long ceased to be a question of prohibition or anti-prohibition. It is the bloody angle against which the assaults of the enemies of all law are most vigorously directed and where they produce the most damaging results."

There is the connotative value of "bloody angle" you may detect again the leit motif of Governor Pinchot's political symphony, a comparison of the situation growing out of non-enforcement of prohibition with the struggle that developed into the Civil War.

"I am a believer in prohibition," Governor Pinchot told the ministers of Pittsburgh," but before and beyond and higher than that I am a believer in the United States of America and its Constitution, and I am opposed root and branch and for good and all, to the men who are attempting for appetite or for profit, to weaken respect for law in this country and so to undermine and degrade the nation to which they owe their loyalty and their service."

TODAY A MORAL QUESTION

In that same speech Governor Pinchot defined his view of the place of the Eighteenth Amendment in the United States today. He said:

"The dry movement began as temperance, a religious question. It won its great victory as prohibition, an economic question. Today it has become law enforcement and a moral question—the first and most vital moral question before the people of the United States."

Abraham Lincoln became the man of the hour with the close of the national election campaign in 1860. Friends of Gifford Pinchot, who believe as he does, that the foremost question before the people is law enforcement, regard him as the man of the hour in 1924. But Roosevelt, not Lincoln, is more nearly the model of Pinchot. In his inaugural address at Harrisburg a year ago he said:

"I was a follower of Roosevelt while he was living. I am his follower no less today, as his great soul still leads this people on the road to better things. The movement which resulted in my election is the direct descendant of the Roosevelt Progressive movement of 1912. The point of view was the same, the specific platform planks were largely identical and the popular support came mainly from similar sources. Both were based squarely on the proposition that the public good comes first. This administration has taken that proposition as its foundation stone, and upon it hopes and intends to erect a structure of honest and effective service to all the people without distinction of race, creed, sex or political complexion."

RESPONSIBILITY OF PEOPLE

"The break-down of law enforcement is proof enough, if every other proof were lacking, that Pennsylvania needs a new birth of political righteousness. The responsibility lies not alone at the door of the politicians. It lies also at the door of the people, who for years have tolerated in their public servants standards of conduct known to be indefensible and under which no private business could survive. The people have suffered the commonwealth to be badly served. This is the essential evil, and here must be the fundamental change.

When he said "Pennsylvania" and "commonwealth" was he thinking "United States"?

His declaration that he is a follower of Roosevelt today was not an idle figure of speech. There is a decidedly Rooseveltian air in his informal treatment of the visitors who come to see him. From 10 to 12 each day he is the easiest man in the world to see, seemingly. There is the reception room and there is Gifford Pinchot.

It is a large room, paneled with dark oak, seventy-odd feet long,

ARE YOU IN FAVOR OF THE BOK PEACE PLAN?

Mr. Harry Kingman of the Y. M. C. A. has been appointed China representative of the American Peace Award, which conducted the $100,000 gold peace prize in the United States and has been requested to conduct a referendum among Americans here on their approval or disapproval of the plan. THE CHINA PRESS has already published the full text of the prize winning plan and on the ballot below a brief resume is given.

The most urgent problem confronting the world today is that of discovering the road to peace. Whether or not the winning Bok plan is the idea that will put Peace on a workable basis is now being tested by leading newspapers all over the United States.

Cast your vote today on the ballot below and mail to Mr. Kingman at 120 Szechuen Road.

THE PLAN IN BRIEF

Proposes

I. That the United States shall immediately enter the Permanent Court of International Justice, under the conditions stated by Secretary Hughes and President Harding in February, 1923.

II. That without becoming a member of the League of Nations as at present constituted, the United States shall offer to extend its present co-operation with the League and participate in the work of the League as a body of mutual counsel under conditions which

1. Substitute moral force and public opinion for the military and economic force originally implied in Articles X and XVI.
2. Safeguard the Monroe Doctrine.
3. Accept the fact that the United States will assume no obligations under the Treaty of Versailles except by Act of Congress.
4. Propose that membership in the League should be opened to all nations.
5. Provide for the continuing development of international law.

lighted by three tall French windows, and some interesting souvenirs of past venality in the shape of gilt and crystal candelabra and ornate floor standards of a kindred design. These were paid for as bronze, but now it is accepted as a fact in Pennsylvania's history that they were made of cheaper metal. Above the sombre panels is a high frieze of mural paintings, vividly colored, in which Miss Violet Oakley has told the story of the religious motive for the founding of Pennsylvania. Around the walls are high-backed chairs and benches, upholstered in hand tooled leather that must have cost a goodly share of that $15,000,000 the tax payers of the state parted with in return for their state house.

OFFICE OPEN TO ALL

Gatherings quite as mixed as those Roosevelt used to deal with come to this room to meet the Governor. Here with their backs to the wall are a few wearing fraternal badges in their lapels, unhappy cogs perhaps in that once powerful machine that functioned relentlessly until the death of Boies Penrose. Next to them are three or four others, churchmen if one may accept as evidence white lawn ties, double-breasted frock coats and similar details of appearance. Here is a middle-aged woman and there a young man. It is a dull day at the executive offices. The Governor enters without ceremony and has begun to move about the room. He pauses before the clergymen, responding heartily to their greetings.

"It's about an appointment, Governor," they tell him.

Now his thumbs are hooked inside the armholes of his vest, his fingers clasped across his chest. It is an easy span for them. Governor Pinchot is a lean man.

"Shoot," he invites, and the spokesman clears his throat.

It is in the private office of the Governor that one may get a slant on the "mess at Harrisburg" and the man who is cleaning it up. It is a chamber at once Gothic, Jacobean and with some Renaissance ornamentation. The walls are carved until they appear to be incrusted with fruits, flowers, birds, beasts, scrolls, and the Legislature of Pennsylvania knows what all. The committee of the whole must have sat up for many nights in succession devising ways of spending money in this room. If the saloon had survived long enough to struggle with the chain store idea, the proprietor of the biggest chain of saloons probably would have had himself hived up in some such throne room as this.

ROOSEVELT HIS IDEAL

Over the red Numidian marble of the mantel is hung a framed picture of Theodore Roosevelt. On the desk of the Governor is a Roosevelt calendar, each day revealing some pungent utterance or writing of Theodore Roosevelt.

"Let me tell you," says the Governor, "what we've been doing here. Within a year we have gotten things in such shape that we are saving $40,000 every working day. We'll be saving more before long. One thing we did was to fire the loafers; end the sinecures.

"We've been as decent about it as we could, but here and there we have had to drop out an efficient person because there was no need for him. There was plenty of howling, a great deal at times, but I can be awfully deaf at times.

"Before I came here salaries frequently were adjusted according to political favor. In some cases political favorites were getting three times as much salary as less fortunate job holders were receiving for the same kind of work. Well, we've been taking the public service out of that kind of politics.

"Most people in government employment would rather do good work than bad if you give them a chance, give them decent leadership, a chance for promotion on merit. Right now we are doing more and better work with three-fourths of the money that was being spent before, and the people in the departments like it better.

"We have a uniform system of accounting now, and the governor of Pennsylvania has complete fiscal control. Why, I've had the head of a commission tell me that he didn't know what his appropriation was. Under the old systems deficits were accepted as a matter of course.

SAVED $40,000 A DAY

"When I took office the state was confronted with a deficiency of $29,000,000. I told the Legislature that I would cut appropriations to the appointive departments by this sum, provided the Legislature would take care of the increased subsidies to common schools. This cut the appointive departments one-fourth. The appointive departments have planned their budgets accordingly, and this saving of $29,000,000 is now assured. Better service is now being given for every $3 spent than for $4 before, and that at a time of higher costs and wages. This is a saving of $40,000 a workday to the taxpayers of Pennsylvania."

It is not possible to cover all the saving and economies that were brought about by Governor Pinchot and his budget officer, Clyde L. King, Secretary of the Commonwealth. But two leakages and their method of stopping them serve to illustrate their methods.

They installed a system of report cards for long distance telephone calls and thereby practically ended what they labeled "dearie" calls. For no one may say how long the 5,000-odd employees of the state were using the long distance telephone just about as freely as they might be expected to use the local telephones. A good many of these calls were utterly disassociated from state business, except that the state had to pay for them. Naturally many of them were merely for the purpose of an exchange of sugary phrases between "sweeties." These "dearie" calls have ben reduced to something approximately zero by the report cards which have a column headed "If public business, specify subject of call."

In the matter of traveling expenses a saving has been made by compelling about one-third of the state employees who travel at the state's expense to route their trips in advance just as commercial travelers do. Until this was required there were a host of state employees who thought nothing of leaving Harrisburg in the morning, traveling a hundred miles or so, transacting an hour's business and then returning to Harrisburg. Nowadays they spend the night out on the road and stay out if necessary until they have completed their work—and the state is saving money.

GOVERNMENT RUNS EASILY

It seems to me that the hardest working man in the public service of Pennsylvania today is the youth who makes the charts and graphs that illustrate the reorganization of the departments and the economies that have been effected. But the story his work tells is one calculated to stir the voters of Pennsylvania to enthusiasm for their Governor. It shows that a maze of 102 departments with a hopeless conflict of authority and functions have been sorted over and abolished until now the government of Pennsylvania is functioning through eighteen departments and three commissions.

"I can get action with this arrangement," said Governor Pinchot, indicating a chart illustrating the reorganized state government. "I'm getting action, too, delivering the goods. There are twenty-eight boards of trustees of state institutions. Formerly these boards were filled with politicians, cogs of the machine. Now these trustees are the highest grade people of the state.

"The several examining boards had been dividing up fees. The state is getting that money now."

"But what do the old line politicians say about this?" I asked him.

"They don't like it, of course, but the people in the departments like it. They all want to give good work, to do the best work they can."

"BIG FIGHT IS DRY FIGHT"

"You see, the one big fight is the dry fight. A very large body of the politicians are wet, and they want to stay wet. Liquor was one of the foundations of the old machine. Booze and special privilege were its strength. The result is"—the Governor hesitated—"wet district attorneys and wet grand juries, a civic organisation of the state that makes enforcement very difficult.

FORESTRY HIS PROFESSION

Everything considered, it would seem that this Pinchot who is Governor of Pennsylvania is the same Pinchot of whom Roosevelt said: "The most useful man in public life in my time." He was born in 1865, received his preparatory education at Phillips Exeter Academy and was graduated from Yale in 1889. After studying forestry in Europe he returned to the United States to begin the practice of forestry. It was and is his profession. In 1898 he took charge of government forest work and was forester and chief of the Bureau of Forestry until 1910. During the Roosevelt Aministration Gifford Pinchot served on a dozen important commissions. He is the author of a number of books dealing with forestry and conservation.

In 1914 he married Cornelia Elizabeth Bryce, daughter of General Lloyd S. Bryce, of New York. They have a son, Gifford Bryce Pinchot.

The personal fortunes of the Pinchots are large, Gifford Pinchot never has had to work to have bread and buter, or even for cake and automobiles, but he always has worked and probably always will, even if he should never be identified as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States.

MR. Putnam Weale, editor of the Far Eastern Times of Peking in a signed article in one of the recent issues of his paper credits the Consortium, or the "Thomas W. Lamont Consortium," as he calls it with the collapse of the Chinese Government Railway system. "Mr. Thomas W. Lamont, the New York Banker, is the man most responsible for Chinese railway confusion because knowing that his group would do nothing alone he tied all the other banking groups with valuable unexecuted contracts to his coat-tails and has kept them there for five long years." Well, knowing that the collapse and confusion existing in the administration of the Chinese railways is due solely to the looting of the various lines by the Chinese militarists and that the Consortium has had nothing to do with the question whatsoever we feel inspired to reprint here a statement made by Mr. Lamont regarding some more of Mr. Weale's propaganda during the Washington Conference, which appeared originally in the New York Times and was to the effect that "Mr. Putnam Weale is exactly 100 percent wrong" on this question.

Mr. Walter W. Head, President of the American Bankers' Association recently cited the following material elements as an example of the strength possessed by the United States:

110,000,000 person occupying 3,700,000 square miles of territory and possessing wealth estimated at G.$300,000,000,000.

Bank Deposits aggregating approximately G.$40,000,000,000.

500,000,000 acres of improved farm lands valued at G.$77,000,000,000.

More than 3,000,000,000 bushels of corn and 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat produced in a year.

More than G.$60,000,000,000 worth of manufactured products turned out in a year.

More than 23,000,000,000 gallons of crude oil produced in a year.

More than 250,000 miles of railroads.

More than 800,000 miles of telephone lines.

The Christian Science Monitor of Boston in reproducing the above made the following pointed comment: "The consciousness of having normal physical strength is a good thing for a man to possess, if he has work to do and a desire to perform it. Its value, however, both to himself and others, is measured by the use to which he puts it. If his time and his own prowess, if his capabilities are allowed to go unexercised, or are employed only for his own gratification, without effort at service for others, if his attention is given to preserving and increasing his physical endowments to the neglect of his higher faculties, he becomes of small value either to himself or his associates, and is not an admired spectacle as a man. On the other hand, if he uses his strength, in subservience to his spiritual nature, for the benefit of others, he is building upon a sturdy foundation."

The Secretary of one of the largest commercial organisations in America recently wrote to a friend in China some "heretical thoughts on the subject of China," which we reproduce here not because of agreement but because they give an insight into the present views of a considerable number of highly-placed Americans regarding the present state of China. Here are the heretical thoughts:

"As you know I am not at all pro-Japanese, but I cannot help recognising the fact that in Japan there do exist peace, order, and organisation. I cannot help thinking that if the Japanese had control of China they would enforce peace, order, and organisation in that distracted country. When I consider the fact that our trade with China is about G.$2 a year per capita of Chinese, whereas our trade with Japan is, roughly, somewhere around G.$30 per capita of the Japanese, it is difficult to avoid thinking that if the Japanese were actually dominant in China there would result a very great expansion of our trade with the Chinese. But there would also result such an improvement of condition of life among the Chinese themselves as would be of great benefit to them and to all the world. The great lack of the Chinese, I not infrequently think, is the possession of something of that genius for organisation which stands out so markedly among the Japanese, and which has such a wonderful effect in the promotion of the general welfare and in the improvement of the conditions of life for any people."

One of the issues of a trade magazine which has a wide circulation among business men in America had this to say regarding the man who plays a lone hand. "Once in a while we meet a man who is trying to play a lone hand. He has no social activities, he has no close friends, he does not exchange or accept advice or counsel in his business. When profits come his way, he shares them with no one; if losses occur, he struggles alone under the burden. The inevitable result of such a life, as someone has expressed it, is that such a man gets so narrow that his ears rub together. Man is by nature a gregarious animal. He thrives upon association with others of his kind. Sharing a loss diminishes it; while sharing a joy multiplies and increases it."

A resolution was adopted at the meeting of the western division of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States held in San Francisco during January favoring the conscription or "mobilisation" of all wealth in time of war along the line of the conscription of man power which was resorted to in the late European War. The introduction and passage of this resolution was significant in that it indicates a feeling among the members of organised business that the burden laid on the individual and the taxpayer was disproportionate to that carried by business.

As a result of the long and bitter fight which has been waged by the citizens of California against the ownership of land in their state by subjects of Japan, the United States Supreme Court recently handed down a decision upholding legislation adopted in recent years in California which forbids the ownership of land by the Japanese. Now many Californians are wondering who is going to do their market-gardening after the Japanese get out. Last year, according to recently published statistics, the Japanese farmed one-eighth of California's four million acres of farm land and from this one-eighth produced almost one-third of the state's annual G.$250,000,000 crop of farm products. To be exact the value of Japanese-produced crops in California in 1923 was G.$73,000,000. In the Imperial Valley which is below sea level and is said to be the hottest place in the United States, the Japanese in recent years have been producing 70 percent of California's cotton crop. In early days in California before the passage of the Chinese Exclusion laws, the gardening or "small farming" work was done by the Chinese. Then the Italians came in and did this work. Then the Japanese forced the Italians out and took it over. Now everybody is wondering who is going to do the work after the Japanese get out. And to this problem, someone has offered the suggestion that perhaps the time has arrived for the "Native Sons" to get out and mix some sweat with their sunshine.

Very few foreigners realise that in the midst of the political chaos existing in China that the Chinese Post Office conducts very efficiently a postal savings bank which at the end of 1922 had deposits amounting to $5,754,668.74 an increase of 165 percent over the deposits in 1921. On December 31, 1922, according to the Bulletin of the Bureau of Economic Information, the deposits amounted to $135.05 for each depositor as against $55 to each in 1921, $46 to each in 1920 and $29 to each in 1919 the year the postal bank was established. The largest number of deposits are in Chihli province which exceed one million dollars, while second place goes to Kwangtung Province with slightly less than a million. Honan Province is third with deposits of more than four hundred thousand dollars and Kiangsu comes fourth with about three hundred and fifty thousand. Kirin and Heilungkiang are lowest on the list with slightly over seventeen thousand dollars deposited in the postal banks.

There are 8,510 motor cars in China, according to recently compiled statistics and in addition there are 1,140 trucks and busses, 68 trailers, 1,126 motor cycles, 99 airplanes, 95 fire-fighting machines (motor-driven) and 2 tractors. Shanghai has the largest number of passenger cars and trucks, the numbers being 4,094 cars and 581 trucks. Peking is second with 1,248 cars but only 35 trucks, while Tientsin holds third place with 750 cars and 14 trucks. Hongkong has 715 cars and 158 trucks and Harbin comes next with 342 cars and 91 trucks. Canton stands in fifth place in China from the standpoint of cars with 288 passenger vehicles and 125 trucks and Hankow comes next with 214 cars and 11 trucks. Yunnanfu is at the bottom of the list with only one car and no trucks.

An Important Point

RECENTLY an interesting decision was rendered by the Commissioner of the United States Court for China, involving a point of extraterritoriality, which may or may not have far-reaching effects. The captain of an American ship is alleged to have committed an offence in Dairen, within the leased territory of Kwantung. For reasons not germane to the point at issue the case was not dealt with at Dairen, and when the ship arrived at Shanghai the matter was brought before the Commissioner of the United States Court, the defendant captain being charged with assault.

Counsel for the defence demurred to the Court's jurisdiction on the ground that the Leased Territory was under the sovereign power of Japan, and that for offences alleged to have been committed there, defendants could not be tried in China. The Court overruled the demurrer for reasons which may briefly be summed up as follow:—By the Treaty of 1844, China gave to the United States certain extraterritorial rights within the territory of the former, which then included what is now the leased territory of Kwantung. This provision was also embodied in the treaty of 1858. In 1898 the peninsula of Liaotung was leased to Russia without violation of China's sovereign rights, and in the peace treaty between Russia and Japan, the former transferred the lease to the latter without modification of China's sovereignty and with her consent. The Court held that the extraterritorial privileges granted to America in the treaties of 1844 and 1858 were not impaired or cancelled by the execution of subsequent agreements to which the United States was not a party.

The principle underlying such a ruling is, obviously, that one party cannot cancel its obligations to or the privileges of a second party by an agreement with a third to which the second was not privy. And we are entitled to suppose until the matter has been passed on by a higher court, if indeed it is, that this is a correct interpretation of the legal position under the treaties.

A monthly magazine, printed locally, has taken upon itself to criticise the decision, not because it may be legally wrong, but because it might lead to unfortunate developments in the diplomatic history of the Far East, involving the reopening of a large number of questions which had been regarded as effectively settled. But we are of the opinion that the decision of the Court deserves no such criticism, but rather praise as a ruling calculated to reaffirm the constitutional rights of American citizens as defined by treaties embodied in our law. The treaties of 1844 and 1858 having been ratified by Congress became part of the law of the United States and no agreement between other countries can modify the privileges of our citizens without the consent of our legislature. It is consequently a matter of relatively small importance what interpretation the State Department cares to put on the documents involved in this case. Indeed, we have always understood that in various rulings Secretaries of State have refused to pass on any question the answer to which might bring it into conflict with any tribunal, and the inference to be drawn from this is, that the State Department itself desires the Courts of the United States to be absolutely untrammeled by any political or diplomatic consideration.

What the writer of the article in question apparently fails to perceive is that the duty of any court of justice is to administer the laws applicable within its jurisdiction and to suggest that such application should be subject to diplomatic expediency is to advance a proposition foreign to the spirit of any judicial process.

Time For A Third Party?

CONTINUING furor over the oil lease scandal in Washington makes it evident that the affair is not all smoke. Discounting the politics, personal ambitions and other petty interests involved, the disclosures have every mark of genuineness and they give Americans everywhere occasion to ponder the state into which politics in the national capital have fallen. There is particular reason for Americans in the Orient to take stock of the situation, for at this distance, removed from the propaganda influences which always surround and weigh down political judgment at home, one is better able to fix on facts quickly and accurately.

If it is true that one or more members of the President's cabinet have accepted personal rewards for leasing public property to private individuals or have disposed of national resources without reason at a fractional value, foreign critics are more than justified in having their little laugh at the American ideal. If the charges are untrue and if the controversy is merely a grand manoeuvre of one political party against another, we have equally small reason for pride. It is a mess of which, under any circumstances, we should be heartily ashamed if it did not contain its profitable lessons.

The affair is not so much an indictment of individuals involved as of the entire system by which political leaders in America are chosen. The voter at home no longer has a choice at the polls. If any choice can be detected, it is between equally standardised representatives of equally indifferent parties. When it is freely said that the President of the United States is no longer chosen by the people but is elected in the party convention and that the two great political bodies differ only in name, it is obvious that America is the victim of political over-organisation and that we should not suffer much from a thorough house-cleaning.

Americans are committed to one policy above all others—that changes in political affairs shall be made by peaceful and intelligent methods. The ballot-box has again and again worked revolution in American politics and it holds the opportunity for many a revolution in future whenever the pressure of circumstances becomes great. It is always time for revolution at the polls and with corruption penetrating to the very executive offices, occasion for change has certainly arrived.

Public officials at home and elsewhere throughout the world have always been as corrupt or as honest and responsible as the mass of the people have permitted. The ballot and the party system have made a short cut to responsible government and if the short cut is not availed of, the reason is not difficult to find. None is more to blame for Tammanys and Thompsons, Alaskan coal steals and Teapot Dome scandals than a public opinion able to act, but too indolent to stir.

The present startling and humiliating disclosures whether true or stimulated are a challenge to American voters—to those in the Orient as much as those at home. If the old parties can offer nothing better than this, a new party is a simple and effective solution. Britain is trying a Worker's Party and it is said that Britain outdoes America in alert and responsive and clean government. Continuing betrayal of trust will ultimately and surely drive American politics to the same or a similar expedient.

Our Noisy Theaters

With the number of movie theaters in Shanghai increasing noticeably each year and with a large part of the population crowding into them not only at week ends but nightly, it is to be expected that a code of courtesy, common to theater audiences elsewhere, will shortly arrive. The theater pest, so driven to shame at home, has come to flourish in Shanghai much to the disgust of patrons who have more than a conversational interest in the cinema.

Oddly enough, theaters at home now encourage quiet by flashing on the screen at intervals a calm-visaged Budda together with the legend "Silence is golden." The inspiration for the idea surely never came from a Buddistic audience in Shanghai. In many a first rate theater here at present chatter during the picture rises to a pitch equaled only in the native schools.

If it were only the children who offended, one could be indulgent, but with adults on every hand discussing domestic problems, airing their business troubles and reading the screen titles aloud, even the most charitable temper yields. Surely all this is something one does not pay for at the box office when he bargains to see "the latest American screen classic."

Theater managers should be able without much argument to see the disaster in permitting this thing to go on indefinitely. If they wish their houses to be deserted by the mass of people who want quiet, if they want their theaters ultimately to resemble the local tea house, indulging the theater pest is a certain and direct method. If, on the other hand, they wish to make their places attractive and pleasant and really profitable, they will begin without further delay to muffle the noisemaker.

Thomas F. Millard, quondam editor of the "Weekly Review" and of "The China Press" is now author of a book, published in New York, which promises to stir no end of controversy on the question of Far Eastern policy. Inasmuch as Mr. Millard has spent a large part of his life in China and has had enviable opportunities for observing the sweep of events here, he stands in a strong position and his judgment will not be lightly challenged. In "Conflict of Policies in Asia", he asserts that the Hay doctrine has unquestionably superceded the Monroe Doctrine in importance and charges the American government with going to sleep on the entire question of the East. Mr. Millard is author of a number of previous books on the Orient, among them "Democracy and the Far Eastern Question", which likewise started a verbal war at home. The arrival of the new book in Shanghai, now expected daily, will be something of an event among persons interested in the trend of American influence here.

"Winning of the Far East" is the title of a new study of the Christian movement in China, by Rev. Sidney S. Gulick. Dr. Gulick, well known to Americans in the Orient, is now associated with the Federal Council of Churches in New York.

Another addition has been made to the "Connoisseurs" Library", famous for its treatises on Oriental art, "Early Chinese Jade," by Una Pope-Hennessey. The edition is limited to 1500 copies. Jade treasures now in the Field Museum, Chicago, the Art Institute, Chicago, the Museum of East Asiatic Art, Cologne and elsewhere are described and examined. The book has 85 beautiful illustrations, eleven of them in color. One of its features is a discussion of the mythological, religious and popular uses of jade in China.

Dr. Ferdinand Ossendowski, author of the much praised and much damned "Beasts, Men and Gods" is now author of "Man and Mystery in Asia", published by Dutton. The book is the tale of Ossendowski's first acquaintance with Siberia when in 1899 he came from European Russia with an expedition sent to investigate mineral lakes on the prairies beyond the Yenesei. There are interesting descriptions of the country around Vladivostock, of the penal island of Saghalin and of life on the steppes at the base of the Altai mountains. The style is similar to that of the author's previous work—imaginative and lively.

"The Ethics of Opium" by Ellen La Motte, author of "Peking Dust" has just been announced. It is a review and revaluation of the world situation regarding the drug traffic. Miss La Motte has devoted much of her life to carrying on the fight against the drug trade and is armed with striking information. She discuss the situation in India and other British dependencies and then in China and other independent nations and their colonies, charging that there is at present no sincere effort to suppress the opium traffic on the part of the commercially interested powers. The key to the problem, she feels, is a keen knowledge of state affairs in the producing countries and an aroused and vigorous public opinion. She urges further repressive measures on the part of international bodies such as the Conference of the League of Nations, scheduled to meet in July, probably at Washington.

"Aunt Polly's Story of Mankind" is a screaming new parody by Donald Ogden Stewart. The author's foil is this time Willem Hendrick Van Loon, author of the "Story of Mankind," the popular history of the race. Stewart previously thrust at H. G. Wells with his "Parody Outline of History" and recently took off the books on Etiquette and Literature with two other witty volumes.

Among the new books to arrive this week one is particularly notable, "The Chaste Diana", by E. Barrington. It is an imaginative romance of the first Polly Peachum, leading character in Gay's "Beggar's Opera", and is full of the joy and color one would expect from any story of the charming Polly. The author insists that he has used all the historical data available and then gives free rein to his nimble, creative fancy.

The Florentine Dagger

By Ben Hecht

(Boni and Liveright, New York)

Read "The Florentine Dagger" for an hour, turn down the lights, let the fire fill the room with animated shadows and you will henceforth be a firm believer in ghosts and other weird denizens of the night.

Ben Hecht has unquestionably done his best in this imaginative and seductive new mystery story. Out of his extraordinary newspaper career which has associated him with many an odd and sensational crime he has drawn the episodes of his book, binding and intensifying them with a fanciful plot. Glimpses of a mediaeval background, an atmosphere disturbingly sinister, pathological fragments, action that is swift and perplexing, a perfectly sustained suspense give the book a finish and a tone which are truly distinctive.

There are few mystery tales in which the guilty person is not revealed long before the climax arrives. But Hecht has done the unusual. He not only conceals the real criminal; he so adjusts his facts that any one of three persons may, up to the last moment, be equally guilty. The very psychology of the several suspects is alike.

The action is swift and bold. It is so sensational from the very beginning that only the nimblest fancy could hold the pace down through the many chapters. By word and thought economy, however, by eliminating the superfluous, by deft shifts in scene and emphasis, attention is held almost breathlessly to the end.

Hecht employs adjectives with almost the daring of an Amy Lowell and coins somber and disquieting phrases with a delightful audacity. Witness, for example, these bits from chapter headings: "An apoplectic scientist explodes; invisible footsteps sound in a dark corridor; the woman of the hidden eyes, the lady of the dagger, appears; underworlds collide—the staircase to Hell and a strange passion; postmarks and time-tables and a false beard that sneers; the dead flower adopts new petals; Francesca of the spiral eyes; a nervous cavalier with tired eyes and a mysterious and puritanical satyr." Almost cubistic speech, but it all contributes cleverly to the suspense and curiosity which make a successful narrative of this character.

A poetic turn to the description gives it a very pleasing quality and the conversation and straight narrative are handled with real skill. There is about the book an artistic air which lingers and which marks the story in one's memory.

The fantastic, grotesque black and white drawings by Wallace Smith give the book much of its atmosphere. They suggest Aubrey Beardsley and the morbidly strange creations of modern continental futurists. They make the book worth seeing and possessing.

"LOOKING AFTER JOAN"

By Mr. John Palmer:—This is an admirable study of human beings. Joan, the heroine, brought up in the old fashioned atmosphere of a country village, is whirled into the maze of an international conference in Paris, with her friend Barbara, aged 27, her protectress. Here Joan meets Nicholas Fayle a delegate at the Conference, and he, steeped in intrigues, finds in the girl something delightfully new and refreshing. Her friend Barbara feels that Joan is in safe hands and acts accordingly.

However, another acquaintance of Joans becomes interested. He is an artist named Royden, and, although he has been paying attentions to Barbara, he takes a fancy to Joan. The relations of these two men and the girl are handled in a wonderful manner, and they are seen through Barbara's spectacles, through Joan's and through one's own.

Royden, a hunter of women by instinct, fastens on the young girl, who does not understand her own feminity, and she yields to him, afterwards confessing everything to Fayle, who, very nobly, continues to love her in spite of her fault.

The strongest scene is wherein Barbara discusses with Royden the personality of the man who ruined her friend; she is of the opinion that such a contaminator must be branded or marked in some way; "Did you at Bruyere notice anybody in particular? Someone who bulged unnaturally at the eyes, or with lips unusually red, or a hairy paw, or whatever it is that distinguishes the vermin?"

Royden, brought to realise his dastardly act, confesses to Barbara that he himself is the cur, and, when she leaves him, takes a revolver from a table beside his easel. A cascade of light came pouring through a cloud which had laid heavily over the sun, and forgetting the revolver he lets it fall to the floor. Kicking it aside, he takes his brush and commences to paint, oblivious of everything else in the world.

A POET'S YOUTH

By Mrs. Margaret L. Woods:—This is a most delightful tale of the great poet—Wordsworth. Many attempts have been made to hush up the poet's early life, and the history of his liaison with Marie Anne Vallon. Although the discoveries of the illicit amors of Byron and Shelley were tolerated, it was held unthinkable that Wordsworth, in his youth, should have been even as other men; that he should have enjoyed the favors of a French mistress, and have been the father of an illegitimate child.

For nearly a 100 years this secret has been kept out of print, but an American professor, delving among the documents in the British Museum, lighted upon a bundle of letters from Wordsworth's sister, and these could not be misunderstood.

However, the secret has been very tenderly treated by Mrs. Margaret L. Woods, and she has woven a novel out of the information. She has made out the best possible case for the great poet, and thus has perforce been a trifle hard on the lady. Such a beautiful and poignant romance has been made from what might have been turned into vulgarism and obscenity, that even the most severe critic, on reading the book, must admit that even if things did not quite happen as Mrs. Woods depicts them, they might very well have done so, and could certainly not have happened very differently.

Wordsworth is shown as a very shy and awkward lover, whilst, at their second meeting, Mlle. Vallon is shown as no longer innocent of the most dangerous form of intrigue. A Cambridge contemporary of Wordsworth, Edward Luttrell, has been the first to enjoy the fruits of Mlle. Vallon's affection, but he flees the country in a complication of disgraces. Mlle. Vallon's protrectress, a scheming old Duchesse, to whom she confesses her indiscretions, sees in Wordsworth an opportunity to restore the girl's self-respect, and arranges for the lovers to retire to England, weher they may be united, safe from the active opposition of Mlle. Vallon's parents.

However, Fate decrees otherwise: the Duchesse dies in England; her mansion is attacked by a revolutionary mob, and to save her, Wordsworth is forced to carry off Annette to a woodland cottage, where his friend lives with a young woman. The lovers are now united by every tie except the blessing of the Church. Wordsworth seeks every chance of securing their marriage, and a Roman priest is in the very act of joining their hands before the altar, when Annette's brother breaks in and the lovers are torn from each others arms. In this way Wordsworth's first child was doomed to the stigma of illegitimacy. War breaks out between France and England, and William and Annette meet no more.

No lover of Wordsworth will deny that Mrs. Woods has done the poet a great service by making the story her own before it had become vulgarised, and placing around it a wreath of pure romance and the redeeming chivalry of young imagination.

EXCERPTS FROM GREAT WRITERS

By Mathy

ON FRIENDSHIP

"It is more blessed to give, than to receive," is friendship's first certainty, the tragedy of all true love is that it cannot give enough—if it could it would not be true love.

Nothing less than complete self-surrender will satisfy this thirst—we must be one with that we worship: as the poet sings in the sweetest of all plaintive verses for the satisfaction of disparted loves, so can we be content with no lesser fushion of identity and being.

"Arrive at last the blessed goal
And He that died in Holy Land
Would teach us out the shining hand
And take us, as a single soul."

I should not be content with a "new heaven and a new earth and the former things pass away," if the old friends were not there—that is a sine qua non to any acceptance of a new state with me. I should like to believe with the ancients that there is merely a continuance of the life in some less intense form hereafter—that even bracelets, clothes, and dogs will still be our to care for and display; that is a pretty story of Melissa, wife of Pellander being cold in Hades because her wardrobe, not having been burned at her death, had not yet descended to her.

How cold would be the morals of this vast, heaving existence without the generous intoxication of informing fellowship—a goblet of this wine in a lifetime would make a poet of a blockhead; this is the nectar that Achilles drank with James Boswell of Auchinleck, and is the draught which can make even "the poor, besotted wrock of man or woman feel the noble exception of your presence and your house, amid the general bleakness and sionless."

The first born of Love is Humility, which never grows up, but becomes Genius.

But what a parvenu company is this, assembled in these lofty heights—acquaintanceship, insipid boorly goodwill, social sympathy, and all their flippant associates! Surely these profane adventurers will not desecrate the consecrated summits of Olympus?

Let this un-sacrificing mediocrity respect the solemn splendors of great spirits, let the itinerant herd who smile, and dance, and make fortunes, and throw penakes to missionaries not intrude into be chambers of the blessed, where the Love of god and Man goes forth to battle with the hosts of luxury, indifference and folly.

When we are making friends with any human being, let us not to nets or artifice—let us "descend to meet;" I like to meet a man who declines to be hurried very few minutes, like a child, who will not allow me to flatter or dissimulate, to entice and keep his interest.

This kind of thing is but the vulgarity and burlesque of friendship—an offensive thing, like the story of Jacob's blessing. The moment we seek a friend, not for what he is, but for what he has—from that moment is vitiated in our hearts even the pure joy of possession.

Love cannot be content with perishable riches, but seeks a fortune which needs no veil in Westminster or Paradise.

Love's motive must be so pure that we can see through it; but the world's affection is too commonly of a Laodicean lukewarmth, dependent for any expression at all upon a barter or exchange of trifles.

By no means of an uncommon nature is that story of Oedipus, who cursed his sons Eteocles and Polynices, because they sent him not the shoulder, but the haunch, of meat. But in our saner moments we can afford to be liberal with our unmerited endowment—freely we can give of that which we have so freely received.

Life Story Of First U. S. Minister To China Told In New Book

THE LIFE OF CALEB CUSHING by Claude M. Fuess: Harcourt Brace a Co.

Shanghai readers will be delighted to know that at last the story of the first American Minister to China and of the first American treaty of great consequence with China has been told in all its interesting detail. It is a romantic, adventurous narrative, amusing, readable and of such importance to Americans in the Far East that everyone sincerely interested in affairs here will want to be familiar with it.

Caleb Cushing came to China in 1844. Those were days when "face" was an imperfectly understood institution and the first Minister, consequently, carried. In addition to the usual credentials, a letter, signed by President Tyler but written by Daniel Webster, referring to him as "Count" Caleb Cushing. In anticipation of the solemn occasion on which he was to present the letter in person at the Celestial court, Cushing also brought this costume: A blue coat with gilt button, richly embroidered; a white vest, white pantaloons with gold stripes down the seams and a chapeau with a white plume! Although he negotiated a treaty, he did not get to Peking with this grotesque outfit, the flagship of his flotilla burned on the way at Gibraltar and the gorgeous costume went up in smoke.

In those days the Chinese (very properly, perhaps) treated all foreigners as inferiors and all diplomatic missions as tribute-bearers. Cushing was under instructions to give no presents and to insist on equality in treatment. China was sufficient unto herself, and her civilisation antedated by thousands of years the civilization of any nation which sought to profit by trade with her. Her spirit was unbroken despite defeat in a two-year war with Great Britain, whereby she was compelled to cede Hongkong to the enemy, open five ports to foreign commerce and permit the sale to her subjects of opium grown in India. The war was really, as Mr. Fuess observes, an unsavory affair, brought about directly by a praiseworthy attempt on the part of the Chinese Government to prevent further importation of opium and to confiscate the large amount of the drug which had already been smuggled in by unscrupulous traders; but John Quincy Adams thought Great Britain was quite right in insisting on the profitable sale of poison to the Chinese even though the Emperor, in an attempt to stop it, had made the smoking of opium a capital offense and at no time did this country hesitate to take advantage of the trade opportunities which grew out of that ignoble and one-sided conflict. On the contrary, through the commander of our East India naval squadron, we demanded those opportunities. It was to consolidate our gains that Cushing came to China.

It is a singular thing that we know so little about this man and his distinguished services to the nation. Our textbooks practically ignore him. To describe at the outset the costume intended for his Chinese mission may have given an impression of undue levity. Cushing was Congressman from Massachusetts, a Brigadier General in the Mexican War, Judge, Attorney General in Pierce's Cabinet, counsel for the United States at the Geneva arbitration of the Alabama claims, and Minister to Spain. He seem without doubt to have been the ablest lawyer of his time in America. Although he sympathized with the South prior to the Civil War, he was loyal to the Union. He was a friend of Webster, Whittier, Everett, Choate, Summer, Grant, Jefferson Davis. He had a sharp tongue and made many enemies: so that after he had been named for the Supreme bench, President Grant thought it wise to withdraw his name because of the partisan opposition to him. He achieved a national influence, such that his opinions on public questions were awaited with keen interest, and, regardless of politics, he particularly directed the foreign policy of this country for decades. Buchanan, Lincoln, Johnson and Grant consulted him on many occasions. More than once he was mentioned for the Presidency. Yet our school books mostly pass him by.

Webster, who was on such close terms with Cushing that he borrowed from him thousands which he never repaid, and apparently had no intention of repaying, wanted Edward Everett, another good friend, sent to China. Everett was Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, and Webster manoeuvered under cover to supplant him. But Everett knew something about politics himself and managed to hold his post. It was thus that the choice fell upon Cushing, who was better equipped for the mission than either of the others.

It must not be supposed that because Cushing did not get to Peking his work was unsuccessful. It was characteristic of him that one of his first tasks was to acquaint himself fairly well with the Manchu dialect. In the same way he learned Spanish before he became Minister to that country, and he spoke French like a Frenchman. He was a man of inveterate industry.

In the belief that "very imperfect and incorrect notions exist in China as to the Constitution and character of the United States," Cushing prepared and translated into Chinese a brief account of his country and its history. He was strictly instructed not to kowtow, as was required of other foreign envoys, but he made an elaborate study of Chinese characteristics and etiquette. He was later to learn with chagrin that the Chinese knew a lot more about America than he had suspected.

After Cushing and his suite reached Macao, then, as now, a Portuguese concession, there were almost interminable delays. Ching, the acting Chinese Governor General, made it clear that the Emperor would not see the Minister, nor was he in any hurry to summon from Peking an Imperial Commissioner. Cushing lost patience, and reminded him that failure to receive the embassy of a friendly State "would among Western States be regarded as an act of national insult, and a just cause of war." The imperturbable Ching let the threat pass. A week later Cushing reminded him that his conduct might "be the misfortune of China, but it will not be the fault of the United States." Still Ching manifested no symptom of terror. So Cushing sent the Brandywine from his flotilla up the Bay of Canton to Whampoa to fire a salute. This caused no great excitement, but it did bring from the acting Governor General a statement that as much haste as was possible was being made.

Cushing knew better.

I can assure your Excellency (he wrote) that this is not the way for China to cultivate good will and maintain peace. The late war with England was caused by the conduct of the authorities at Canton, in disregarding the rights of public officers who represented the British Government.

Cushing's temper seems to have got the better of him here. The direct cause of the war was that the Chinese burned some smuggled British opium. But he continued:

If, in the face of the experience of the last five years, the Chinese Government now reverts to antiquated customs, which have already brought such disasters upon her, it can be regarded in no other light than as evidence that she invites and desires war with the other great Western powers.

Despite these thundering threats, it was ten days before the unhurried Ching reported that Kiyeng, an Imperial Commissioner, was on his way; and it was more than a month more before he reached Macao. In the meantime Cushing gave the American Consul at Canton a new flagstaff and arrow weathervane. The Chinese thought the arrow was bewitched, and attacked the consulate with stones, until they had to be repulsed with firearms. Thereafter the arrow, "which shot to all quarters, thereby causing serious impediment to the felicity and good fortune of the land," was left off the flagstaff.

The deliberations were carried on in the Temple of Wang Hiya, and on occasions the chief god was displaced so a Massachusetts Yankee might sit in his chair. The treaty, conferring "most-favored nation" rights on nationals of the United States, was signed in the temple on July 3, 1844. It was a hot day, and as the temple was without ventilation, the Americans suffered considerably. The Chinese were in cool silks and quite comfortable. There was no exchange of presents, but there was an exchange of banquets, which proved for the Americans an ordeal even greater than the session in the sweltering temple.

Cushing was bitterly anti-British, and he was disturbed because some of the English newspapers ridiculed the fact that a mission had been sent from the United States to do what England had already done. He wrote to Washington about it. He did not make the pertinent point (nor does Mr. Fuess make mention of it), that the Portuguese had opened China to trade in 1550, long before any other nation; and that the first formal treaty of the Chinese with any external power—since the time of Marco Polo—was with Russia in 1689, and covered territorial as well as trade conditions.

Cushing was proud that he had gained advantages never before granted in a Chinese treaty. These gains became effective, however, for other nations trading here. President Tyler was vastly pleased at the outcome of the mission, and Cushing started back home. After a voyage of nine weeks he landed at San Blas, Mexico, and started in a diligence to Mexico City. On his way bandits robbed him of his books, private papers and anything else he had of value; and he was enraged that the Mayor of a near-by town would take no steps to catch the offenders. Less than four years later as a Brigadier General in the invading American forces, he found that same Mayor on duty in that same town, gave him the impression that the expedition was solely on his account and nearly frightened him to death.

Although Cushing was 46 years old when the Mexican War came, and hailed from a State which had always opposed the annexation of Texas, he raised a regiment, plunged into the study of tactics and strategy and got himself a commission. While he was in Mexico he was nominated for Governor of Massachusetts by the Democrats, but the Whigs defeated him, with the assistance of James Russell Lowell's "Biglow Papers," which were chiefly devoted to satirization of Cushing. After Pierce was elected Cushing became his Attorney General and wrote an immense volume of clearly reasoned opinions, which became precedents in the office.

Nobody in the present Cabinet, unless it be Herbert Hoover, works so hard as Cushing worked. He was at his desk at 7 in the morning and often until late at night. Probably his achievement and his most substantial official service to his country.

Cushing was a nationalist and something of an imperialist. He regarded the white race as "the consummate impersonation of intellect in man and loveliness in woman." In the trial of one of his many famous law cases he argued that it would be both impossible and inadvisable to undertake the suppression of alcoholic stimulants. He himself was abstemious. He had extraordinary talent and a precise and richly stored mind, but the author of this excellent biography makes no claim to genius on his behalf.

Mr. Fuess is an instructor in English at Andover, and married one of the Cushing nieces; he has done a praiseworthy and conscientious piece of work; and the paper jackets on these volumes, thank Heaven, are not of the common screaming billboard variety, but are as dignified as the volumes themselves.

After a restless night, during the long hours of which you have tossed and turned vainly longing for sleep, you sink just when day is breaking into a sort of torpor, which lulls and seems like slumber come at last. And when the time to get up arrives, and you are called, the awakening comes as a shock. You feel worn out and quite unfit to rise to get ready for the labours of the day.

If you are frequently subject to such attacks of insomnia the reason is that your nerves have been overworked or your blood has become impoverished and thin, with the result that your entire system is run-down. The Passing Of The Mackay Treaty

The circumstances attending the passing of the Mackay Treaty which was never robust and of recent years visibly lost weight and strength, are partially described in the Chambers' Log, where are recorded the bulletins issued, it is feared, in connection with its approaching demise, says the British Chamber of Commerce Journal for February. The Treaty has played an ineffective and somewhat pathetic part in our commercial life, where nevertheless it will leave a gap that will be difficult, if not impossible, to fill. Born in circumstances that augured ill, its career has been a disappointing one. It never had the advantages of the vigorous environment in which its elder brethren were nurtured nor, paralised in one limb, the exercise necessary to acquire the stamina requisite for difficult modern conditions. Deprived of these tonics yet expected to function, it oscillated between self-assertiveness and retirement, now assuming a sprightly air of conviction, anon plunged into prolonged periods of hesitation and doubt. Its parents and godparents, guardians and legal advisers collectively and individually did all they could for it. They introduced it into distinguished society; they helped it at awkward moments; they tried never to allow it to feel cold-shouldered or slighted; on not a few occasions, indeed, they declined to partake in discussions from which those with whom it was unpopular sought to exclude it. Yet somehow it never made good. Occasionally, it evinced determination, filling its backers with momentary hope in its capacity to succeed. But always it gave in, and now, now it is nigh unto death.

Not the least pathetic part about its career is the fact that circumstances and not persons are to blame. To review these at all completely is obviously beyond the capacity of these customary paragraphs, indeed the briefest review must extend them beyond their ordinary length. Yet the moral involved is, perhaps, sufficiently important to justify quotation of the views of one who has been watching at the bed-side of the dying Treaty, and whose trained capacity for observation and comment puts him amongst the foremost historians of contemporary events—we refer to the Peking correspondent of "The Times." The following remarks were published in London on December 18—just about the time when the Treaty's condition was becoming acute. He says:

"At the Washington Conference Japan, in effect, was hauled over the coals for her aggression in China during the war. She recognised the inevitable and subscribed to the decision of the conferring Powers to abstain from any interference in the internal affairs of China. The Japanese business interests have come to realise that the forward China policy of their military party has not paid. A boycott has been hurting their trade, and they are now eager for the good will of the Chinese. They are putting up with shooting at their ships and killing and kidnapping of their people with a forbearance that is astonishing when contrasted with their previous attitude. They will not be a party to any coercion in China, and they have killed the railway police scheme projected in the Lingchen Note. If there is to be any action in China let the onus of it be on the others. They intend to abide by the line of conduct thrust upon them at Washington. The United States, on its part, having convened the Washington Conference and led in the campaign for recognition of China as a State deserving of the fullest consideration, is apparently equally clear that intervention of any kind in China is contrary to the Washington Agreement, as well as contrary to the whole spirit of her own foreign policy. Between these two stools the British Government, confronting the realities of the situation, and compelled to think of means to protect her manifold interests in this country, falls to the ground.

"So be it. But the facts are staring us all in the face. Treaties are going by the board in China. Our ships are being bombarded, our nationals killed and wounded and kidnapped by irresponsible soldiers and brigands. The sufferings of the Chinese people are immeasurable. The material damage being done is enormous. The unemployment in England is multiplied here a hundredfold by the ravages of troops and soldiers and by the enforced cessation of trade in the interior. A great acreage that should be growing crops to feed the people is producing opium to subvert their faculties. The armies are living on the taxes derived from the drug. Troops and officials are being demoralised by the traffic in it and the use of it. In the prolonged absence of law and order the whole social structure is crumbling. It is true that the great foreign trade is being maintained, because the dislocation in the interior is being compensated for by expansion in the areas on coast and river where conditions are comparatively normal. But the chaos in the interior has a cumulative effect which cannot but increasingly effect foreign interests, for every wave of disorder leaves things worse than before. So also does every outrage on foreigners which goes unpunished. One of the most disquieting features of the whole situation is the decline in respect for foreign life and property, which affects all nationalities alike.

"The foreigner wants respect for treaties and rights, and protection for life and property. It is in the power of the Tuchuns individually in their respective spheres to secure both. It should be the object of foreign policy to put pressure upon the Tuchuns to meet this requirement. If it cannot be done through the Government it should be done directly. If results are not obtained it would be feasible at certain points to apply active pressure, and anything of the kind would have a tremendous moral effect in the country. One Tuchun brought to his knees would set them all bowing like China dolls. Political unity cannot be restored by foreign intervention, but by it foreign prestige can be re-established, as it was re-established in 1900 and on other occasions. Probably there will be no improvement until the Powers show their teeth by landing additional troops. For that step the unity is required which is now absent. Without unity of purpose it is useless to talk to the Chinese about anything. But if it were made clear that the Powers together meant business, no matter what means they proposed to use, China would speedily prove amenable. In the meantime, until the Powers realize that it is to their interest to act unitedly, it is superfluous to think of conferences relating to the tariff or any other subjects. The only kind of conference worth holding is one which shall solicit the views of the Powers concerned and determine a line of action for all to follow in common."

Since those prophetic words of wisdom were written an important speech has been made by Mr. Schurman in Peking and it is therefore to be inferred that the circumstances described above have to some extent altered. Certainly, as far as British and American merchants are concerned, the most complete understanding and co-operation exists, and it is permissible too to infer from their participation in the joint meeting regarding trademarks that Japanese merchants are also at one with us. Naturally as stated in this column last month, co-operation in regard to questions such as the proposed trademark law cannot be expected to eliminate commercial competition. Nobody expects what is at once impossible and, on the whole, undesirable. Yet all nationalities in Shanghai are prepared to unite in defence of interests common to all, for all realize that, if they do not, other Treaties, and with them this Settlement, must share the fate of the one of which these paragraphs constitute an anticipatory obituary notice.

When The Hand Grows Unsteady

WEATHER beaten, wrinkled skins and tough, wiry beards welcome the New Improved Gillette. It cuts the hair clean and close. No need to stretch the skin tight to make a firm surface for the razor, because the New Improved Gillette is made so that the guard smoothes the skin where the full length of the blade meets the hair.

Hair and lather do not clog this New Improved Gillette. The blade is curved by the cap into just the proper position to cut the hair even with the surface. And the blade is held tightly so it does not vibrate and pull the hair while shaving.

When you buy we suggest it be the New Improved Gillette.

Good shops everywhere sell it.

Inventions That Increase Production In U. S. Industries

(Foreign Press Service)

Washington.—The extent to which inventive genius, making possible enlarged production per worker, has stimulated industrial production in America was described recently by Julius H. Barnes, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Nothing so stimulates invention, or is so necessary to it as the support of quick and sure and large rewards, as Mr. Barnes pointed out. The structure of American industry, he finds, and its adaptability to new invention, as well as the readiness of the American consumer to welcome new devices, hold out these rewards to the inventor.

Some typical industries in which inventions have enlarged to a remarkable degree the production per worker are:

The steel industry in which one or two men using unloaders can now replace twelve to twenty men unloading by hand; by use of skip hoist, lorry car and automatic weighter, two men replace fourteen in furnace charging; in pig casting, seven men with casting machine replace sixty; in open hearth operation, one operator with a charging machine replaces forty hand charges. With traveling cranes twelve men pouring replace thirty-seven, and two men unloading pig iron with electric magnet and crane replace one hundred twenty-eight.

In the clothing industry, six men operating two boarding machines replace twenty. One girl operating rib cutting machine produces twenty-five times more than by hand. In men's clothing, in various processes, machines with a single operator replace six and eight workers.

SHOE MACHINES

In the shoe industry, one [illegible] machine produces the equivalent of six to ten hand workers, in the glass industry, one type bottle making machine replaces fifty-four workers; in window glass, production with a machine blower increases thirty to fifty times; in coal mines an automatic conveyor for pier unloading allows twelve men to do the work of 150, and in cigar making, four operators with machines produce the equivalent of fifteen by hand.

Wrapping machinery for bread, tobacco, chewing gum, cigarettes, soap, sugar and razor blades, makes it possible for one operator using a single wrapping machine to replace as many as forty wrappers.

"This tendency," Mr. Barnes notes, "extends through all industry from foundry work and material handling to bread making and the manufacture of books; it extends even into office equipment, where adding and calculating and bookkeeping machines expand human service three, five and ten times. It extends even into agriculture, which does not lend itself so readily to machine production, but the old standard of farm plowing of one man, one acre per day, has been displaced on a Montana farm adapted to tractor plowing with the result that twenty-two acres can now be plowed by one man as his day's work. The average wheat crop of the United States may be fairly estimated to require seven million days work; the methods used before the day of the harvester and reaper and its successor the crop would have required 130 million days labor."

"It is well at this point to recall that this labor is not released to unemployment, but that only thus has it been possible in America to secure the personnel for enlarged old industry and to the established—new ones which inventive progress continually suggests."

The labor thus released does not swell the ranks of the unemployed, according to Mr. Barnes, but is used in the expansion of old industries or to establish the new industries suggested by inventive progress.

THE SECOND GREAT RECITAL
by
Mme. KARINSKAYA
No Lover of Music Should Miss the wonderful interpretation by this great artiste of Russian Folk-Songs, Gipsy Tabor-Songs and Romances beloved by Dostoyevsky, Lermontoff, Pushkin and Tolstoy, the great writers of Russia.
Read Some of the Enthusiastic Reports:
A most enjoyable recital was given by Mme. KARINSKAYA at the P.U.M. auditorium under the auspices of the institute of Fine Arts yesterday evening. The singer has a wonderful voice and her numbers were well chosen. (The Far Eastern Times, 28 Dec., 1923).
The Russian Star is second to none, and one may congratulate Tientsin on the chance to hear and see her. Her fresh, powerful voice of unusual amplitude, deep contralto rising to silvery soprano, is not met often and is worth hearing.
She is a first class artist performer, emphasizing her singing with actor's play that makes intelligible the spirit and sense of a foreign song even to those who do not know the language.
The acting is enhanced by the brilliant costumes of the Russian nobility worn three centuries ago. (Peking and Tientsin Times, 27th Jan., 1924)
MME. KARINSKAYA will sing new numbers which were not included in the first concert.
Admission: $1.00, $2.00 and $3.00

Women the world over, and since the world was an infant, have been influenced by clothes.
The longing for gowns better than those of one's neighbor has led to as much trouble in the world, perhaps, as any other ambition.
It is a picture play that has the influence of clothes as its motive power.
Gowns, beautiful gowns, most of them brought direct from Paris, are worn by Pearl White.
The story of what a woman will do, to get finer clothes than her neighbor.

Cotton Reports

In their weekly report on the Shanghai Cotton market, Messrs. A. B. Rosenfeld and Son write as follows:

China Cotton:—During the past week, the cotton market has been unsettled, with violent fluctuations, causing considerable nervousness owing to the continual decline in Mid-Americans. At the close however mid-Americans recovered some 25 points in consequence of which our market responded accordingly.

Regarding the outlook in the broadest way, it is impossible to divorce the future course of the market from the developments in the general economic situation. Any improvement in this direction would, in view of the preponderance of the speculative short interest, no doubt, be readily responded to by the market. On the other hand, although prices show a total decline of nearly seven taels a picul since the high level of the season, the serious question remains whether this decline has fully discounted the very material recession in business which is sure to follow in the wake of the unparalled unsettled condition of China's economic market. On the whole, we feel that in times like the present, caution ("in bearing") must be recommended.

Yarn:—During the past week the yarn market has been nervous and erratic, and price declined some three to four taels as compared with last week's level, due to the weakness of the raw material in the world markets. In all some 3,000 to 4,000 bales have changed hands for export to Chefoo, Canton, Tientsin, Tsingtao, Wuhu, Szechuen, Swatow, Hankow, Changsha and Yingkow.

SPUNT'S REPORT

Messrs. J. Spunt and Company write as follows in their weekly report on the cotton market:

China Cotton.—Our market during the greater portion of the past week evinced an easier undertone, which is ascribable to the continued depression in the local yarn markets and the bearish sentiment engendered by the declines in both American and Indians as well as to the rumors of a fair volume of business having been contracted on lower grades in Indians at prices on a parity with those current on similar domestic qualites. At the close, however, there evolved a firmness in the rates with a tendency promising further advances on any palpable demand on the part of spinners. Viewing the situation from the standpoint of available stocks of the raw material at the moment and taking into consideration the renewed rising trend in foreign cotton markets, the only deduction that presents itself is that absorption of supplies at current rates will ultimately prove remunerative. Tone of the market, Steady.

Coolidge To Raise Tariff On Wheat

Washington, Feb. 29.—It is intimated at the White House that President Coolidge will increase the import tariff on wheat, probably to 45 cents, the maximum allowed, as a result of the Tariff Commission's investigation.

REAL MONTE CARLO SEEN IN "ENEMIES OF WOMEN"

Whenever men and women love to flirt with the goddess of chance, the name Monte Carlo is the one to conjure with. Famed the world over as the most fashionable gaming resort in existence, Monte Carlo is to most, however, just a name. Comparatively few persons, outside the wealthy classes, have been privileged to come into actual contact with this famous old world play-ground. Not even in motion pictures during the last seven years have they been privileged to see Monte Carlo in anything but replica.

In "Enemies of Women" Cosmopolitan Productions' new super-feature, which comes to the Carlton in the near future, the public will have the opportunity to see on the screen what are said to be the most striking scenes ever made of this world-famous resort. In the popular romance by Vicente Blasco Ibañez Monte Carlo not until Ibanez himself had arranged matters with the authorities at the Casino, however, that "shots" of it could be made. The resultant scenes of Monte Carlo with its Casino and beautiful Terrace are said to be the most perfect in detail that have ever been photographed.

Monte Carlo, which is situated in Monaco, the smallest principality in the world, is believed by many to be the most picturesque spot along the beautiful Riviera. The scenery is incomparable for its beauty, including steep mountain heights, winding roads and a gorgeous view of the Mediterranean which Monte Carlo overlooks. Despite its natural beauty, however, Monte Carlo owes most of its fame to the fickle wheel of chance. The daily exchange of fortunes is the largest in any place in the world, and anyone may "try his luck" there except the natives of Monaco who are forbidden to play. The town of Monte Carlo itself was founded in 1156 and the Casino has been utilised as a gaming resort since its foundation 1861, at which time it was leased for fifty years to a Francois Blanc. Later its control passed to a joint stock company which now operates.

"The Enemies of Women" has been filmed on a most lavish scale, and is said to reveal a greater wealth of beauty than has ever before been brought to the screen. Lionel Barrymore, is featured in the cast which also includes such prominent players as Almo Rubens, Pedro de Cordoba, Gareth Hughes, Gladys Hulette, W. T. Thompson, William ("Buster") Collier, Jr., Paul Panzer, Mario Marjeroni and Betty Bouton.

"TWO KINDS OF WOMEN" AT THE APOLLO

"Two Kinds of Women," an R-C Picture, in which Pauline Frederick is appearing in the stellar role at the Apollo Theater tomorrow, bears out a fact that the public is being forced to realise—that in their steadily broadening sphere of activity women can do the work of men and do it well, often better than men themselves. They can overcome the handicap of sex which tradition has given them and still not sacrifice any of the exalted traits of womanhood.

But this latest of Frederick pictures is far from being an argument for the emancipation of women. The women, God bless 'em, are already emancipated. "The Kinds of Women" is a swiftly moving drama that makes one want to seek surcease from the noise and bustle of the city in the beauty and grandeur of the California Sierras, where much of the picture was filmed.

The majesty of the mountains and sheltered valleys, the wholesomeness of this outdoor story, is like a breath of fresh air in a stifling room. To the average city-dweller the picture will open up a vista of the idyllic land in which he hopes to spend his declining days. There is not a dull moment in the entire production. Nowhere does the action drag. The photography has as a background some of California's most artistic scenic masterpieces.

But analysis of the picture's appeal is hardly necessary. It is a

"WHITE TIGER" ANOTHER APOLLO OFFERING

"White Tiger" is the fancy-captivating title of the Universal-Jewel photoplay which will be seen at the Apollo Theater beginning Wednesday in which Priscilla Dean is said to excel her personal triumph in a similar underworld story of two or three years ago, "Outside the Law," and Tod Browning his handiwork as an author and director.

The former Browning-Dean success, "Outside the Law," was laid in San Francisco's colorful Chinatown. The new underworld picture from these two artists is laid in the amazing atmosphere of international crookdom.

The heroine Miss Dean impersonates, is a girl raised without knowledge of the difference between right and wrong, believing that slick work in slipping a string of pearls off some society lady's neck or the stickpin out of some man's tie is her rightful contribution to society's progress as a useful and active citizen. "Active" is right, judging from the operations of the adventurous trio of which she is a member.

The other two artists in lightning appropriation are impersonated by Wallace Berry and Raymond Griffith, and the three characterisations are said to do one thing above all others: analyze and satirize the crook nature and prove the utter lack of "honor," "romance" or even plain comradely spirit in the undertakings of a band of crooks.

Matt Moore, remembered as the "heavy" of the recent success, "The Storm" has the sympathetic leading role opposite Miss Dean as the one "straight" character in the story.

Universal is not trying to put Priscilla Dean in the same type of vehicles all the time and establish her as a single track star. Her stories vary widely in style and theme, not following any one pattern. The only requirement is that they be "big" and call into play as much as possible of her unlimited emotional and dramatic ability.

"WOLVES OF THE NIGHT" AT OLYMPIC

The character played by William Farnum in "Wolves of the Night" is a modern Enoch Arden. Bruce Andrews, a mining engineer, is married to the woman he loves and then separated from her in such a way that she thinks he is dead, and she is persuaded to marry again. The situation where Andrews returns to his old home while still ignorant of how matters stand, expecting to find his wife and child, and is told that the boy is not his, gives the star an opportunity for some of his best work. There is also constant change of location in the story, the action starting on a Western sheep ranch, then moving to a mining district in Chile, and including scenes on the stock exchange before the picture is finished.

The film comes to the Olympic Thursday and will be shown until next Sunday.

"SAND!" IS TITLE OF LATEST PHOTOPLAY AT THE ISIS

William S. Hart has a characteristic western role in his new picture, "Sand!" which is coming to the Isis Theater for four days commencing Thursday next. The film was adapted from a magazine story and scenarised by Lambert Hillyer who also directed.

The central figure, played by Mr. Hart, is a picturesque railroader and cowboy called Dan Kurrie. He drifts into a job as station agent at a small border town and becomes intimate with the former agent, "Pop" Young and his daughter, Margaret, who have been installed as managers of the general store owned by the unscrupulous local boss, Garber. Dan has a run-in with Garber over the cracking of the station safe and loses his job through the boss' machinations. He joins a comboy-outfit nearby. Meanwhile the country side has been stirred by a daring and mysterious hold-up of an express car. Garber makes strenuous efforts to marry Margaret and she runs away to avoid him. Her train is held up by robbers who are after the money it carries. Of course, Dan Kurrie is on the job and foils the thieves, then reveals them as Garber and his gang. A happy future is in sight for Margaret and ehr cowboy lover. Mary Thurman is the leading woman and it is a Paramount picture.

"FOR ONE WOMAN"

Coming to the Isis Theater for 4 days commencing Thursday next is Lois Weber's latest photoplay, "To Please One Woman," which is described as a dramatic expose of some little known facts of married and near-married life.

The story is laid in a country village near the sea and portrays the shadow cast upon two romances by the whims of a selfish woman. To satisfy her capricious wants, her husband goes to ruin and a young doctor is lured from his small-town sweetheart. However, matters adjust themselves satisfactorily in the end, and the tyrant-woman is foiled.

Miss Weber herself is the author of "To Please One Woman," and the cast includes Claire Windsor, a new "find," Mona Lisa, George Hackathorne, Edward Burns, Edith Kessler, and Howard Gay. It is a paramount picture.

"THE CAPITOL" AT THE OLYMPIC

The theme of "The Capitol," coming to the Olympic Monday, concerns the career of a young woman whose mother deserted her father when she was still an infant, and ran away with a man who was being prosecuted by her husband for unlawful business methods. Later we find the girl, who has been reared in a convent, married to Congressman Blake. The mother is devoting herself to social welfare work and keeping aloof from her child that she may more easily climb the social scale. Carroll is now dancing attendance on Mrs. Blake, acting as the tool of his party in trying to win the wife to betray her husband's interests in his fight for a place in the senate.

In the course of events a would-be newspaper reporter takes a hand, and when Carroll and his party are picnicing on an island remote from the mainland, with Mrs. Blake as one of the party, he steals their boats with the intention of keeping them there until Blake puts through a certain bill to which Carroll and his party are opposed. An old boat found on the island is used by Carroll and Mrs. Blake in trying to make the mainland. They are swept over a falls and into the rapids, and Mr. Blake is rescued by her own father who is on the bank of the river when the accident happens.

In a fight with food profiteers Mrs. Blake's mother comes on the scene, and when Carroll tries to gain his point by damaging the character of Mrs. Blake, she reveals his crooked dealing of years before, to help substantiate his newly discovered villiany.

in

"Two Kinds of Women"

Directed by Colin Campbell

She thought him a product of the plains, although he was an Eastern college graduate.

She found him her rock of refuge in her hours of trouble. Together they passed through adventure after adventure—stood off and conquered a band of scoundrels who attempted to despoil her of her wealth, her reputation, of her very life and soul.

He thought her mannish because she could handle a pistol, a rifle and a horse as well as he—because she wore clothes of flannel and leather instead of dainty silks.

—And then he saw her in a gorgeous evening gown.

You, too, will fall head over heels in love with Pauline Frederick.

AN EX-CONGRESSMAN

Former United States Congressman M. E. Driscoll, of Syracuse, New York, who is making the world tour with his wife, was in Japan in 1905 with a party of seven senators and 24 representatives headed by Chief Justice William Howard Taft, then Secretary of War. The party was sent to the Philippines to investigate the Insular Government and subsequently toured Japan and China.

"When we landed in Yokohama," the former Congressman said, "we were received by the people with a chorus of banzai and were accorded privileges in Tokio which they told us had never been granted to foreigners before. We met the Emperor and were shown around the palace grounds, and were banqueted and feasted everywhere.

"But when we landed at Kobe on our way back from China on the return voyage to the United States, we had quite a different reception. The peace treaty between Russia and Japan, had just been completed in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, under the guidance of President Roosevelt and we were told that the Japanese people were greatly incensed at Americans over its provisions. The government authorities promised us a military escort if we wished to go ashore at Kobe to insure our personal safety, but Mr. Taft said that he did not care to go ashore under such conditions so we made up a bridge foursome and played bridge to spend the time while the ship was in Kobe harbor."

Mr. Driscoll was a member of Congress 14 years, retiring from active political life in 1913. Since he has been connected with a law firm in Syracuse.

NOTED DOCTOR ABOARD

Among the passengers of note aboard the Laconia is Dr. Edward Ahlswede of New York, a well known bacteriological expert. During his trip around the world Dr. Ahlswede will visit more than 100 hospitals, hygienic laboratories and medical institutions, where he will collect material on tropical diseases. He is corresponding for several medical journals while on his trip.

Mrs. Lillian Townsend, a wealthy society leader in New York City, is chaperoning three New York girls in the wroid trip. The girls are Miss Marie Palmer, Miss Hope Sarby and Miss Frances Kellogg.

Several passengers aboard the Laconia were on the ship on her first round-the-world journey last year. They include Mrs. Charles E. Crouse of Syracuse, New York; Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Hoover of Lima, Ohio; and Mrs. Mary E. Samson of New York City.

Mr. Howard Whitfield of New York, a paper merchant, will transact business in Japan during the period the Laconia stops at Yokohama.

The Dr. W. S. Mortensen family of Santa Monica, California, numbering six people, is the largest family group aboard the Cunard liner.

Mr. J. T. M. Stoneroad, a coal operator in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is the only passenger aboard with a valet.

A Masonic Club with 83 members is one of the large number of organisations which have been formed aboard the Laconia. State Senator P. F. Clark of San Jose, California; ship's purser Mr. J. E. Cartwright and Commander T. Britten are among the members. The Rev. Edwin J. Aiken of Concord, New Hampshire, declares he is the oldest member, having joined the Masonic order 53 years ago.

Mr. Harry Hervey, directer and lecturer on the cruise, is the author of "Black Parrot," and "Caravans by Night," two novels on the Far East which have had a wide sale in Japan. Mr. Hervey has traveled for the past 10 years and was in Tokio and Yokohama last year with Clark's third cruise aboard the Empress of France. Mr. Hervey has completed the manuscript for a novel entitled "Where Strange Gods Call," a book of impressions of Japan, which is to be published soon by the Century Company, and has signed a contract with the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation of America for publication of a novel to be called, "Ethan Quest." This book is in preparation.

Miss Ruth Seymour, formerly the women's shop writer in the advertising department of the Honolulu Star Bulletin, joined the tourists at Honolulu. She started from New York City a year ago to work her way around the world.

Before leaving New York she had been connected with the editorial staff of Harper's Bazaar magazine and the Crowell Publishing Company.

Mr. Duke Dutton, of Bristol, Connecticut, is a magazine and feature writer, and was at one time a member of the staff of the Associated Press. He is collecting material for a novel, the setting for which will be Japan and the Philippine islands. Mr. Dutton is one of the 50 bachelors aboard. It is estimated that there are four widows to every bachelor on the passenger list.

Mr. Fred Law, one of the directors of the cruise, is on leave of absence from the Philadelphia Bulletin.

CHAMPION CHECKER PLAYER

Mr. Charles W. Bristor, 68 years old, self-styled subsidised tramp, is the champion checker player aboard the Laconia, and a poet of no mean ability. Mr. Bristor says that he has written 2,300 poems on every conceivable subject and that he has penned 68 poems thus far on his trip around the world. He showed one of his best on the subject of seasickness.

Among the oldest passengers aboard is Mr. C. P. Silloway, 78 years old, who is a Civil War veteran.

Dr. Peter J. Gibbons, of New York City, the man who first proposed electrocution in the United States as a substitute for hanging and who is senior surgeon in the Hotel Belmont, is one of the Laconia passengers. Dr. Gibbons tells an interesting story in connection with the introduction of electrocution in the United States.

"In 1893 there was a great agitation in the United States against capital punishment," the doctor said. "In company with several other doctors, I suggested either electrocution or smothering by gas as a substitute, thinking that enough time would be spent arguing over the relative merits of the two methods so that capital punishment would be temporarily suspended. Instead, the authorities accepted electrocution without delay and it was up to me to make good.

"We tried to purchase a dynamo from both the Edison and Westinghouse firms but both were afraid that if it was announced that electricity could be used for killing people that it would hurt the sale of their electrical appliances which they were then renting, not selling outright. We had to buy a dynamo through a dummy purchaser and have it shipped to Brazil and back before we could obtain apparatus to carry out the first electric execution which took place in Auburn State Prison in New York."

Dr. Gibbons is accompanied by his wife and son, Mr. Austin Gibbons, who is one of the atorneys for the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

HAS $15,000 SUITE

Miss Alice B. Yayser, daughter of the owner of the Kayser Silk Mills in New York City, occupies a $15,000 suite aboard the Laconia.

Miss R. F. McLean, a lyric soprano who has just completed a concert tour in New Zealand; and Miss Kantiowits, recently a dancer on the Orpheum Circuit in the United States and now a teacher of aesthetic and clasical dancing in Los Angeles are traveling together. Miss McLean is also from Los Angeles.

Mr. Robert McDowall, a civil engineer of Owen Sound, Ontario, Canada, studied the results of the cathquake on Tokio and Yokohama buildings during the Laconia's stay at Yokohama.

Mr. W. S. Reamer, Columbia, South Carolina, is making his second visit to Japan, having arrived at Yokohama in 1902 aboard the T. K. K. steamer Korea Maru on its maiden voyage to the Orient.

Miss Lucille Brentner of Santa Barbara, California, has given a number of aesthetic dancing exhibitions aboard the Laconia at impromptu entertainments.

WIDOWS GALORE

Every state in the union, Canada, Honolulu, Mexico, Cuba and Czecho-slovakia are represented on the passenger list, the greatest number of tourists hailing from the Eastern states. Ohio is well represented however, as well as California, Indiana and California. Over half the passengers are women, and some of the tourists have nick named the boat the "Widow-nia," since it is rumored that 198 of the passengers come under this category. Mr. E. W. Dow, in charge of the Clark's tour bureau on board the ship, was unable to confirm this rumor.

The Laconia, which is under the command of Captain T. Britten, R. D., R.N.R., is one of the finest liners afloat, and has made a previous trip around the world. She touched Japan just a year ago. She is usually operated on the Atlantic service by her owners, the Cunard Line. There are five decks, inter-connected by two elevators, with cabins on all five decks. The cabin fees range from $1,000 to $25,000 for the entire passage, thus making a total of over $2,000,000 in passage fees for this trip.

CRUISE COVERS 32,000 MILES

The Laconia's cruise, which will take 120 days, covers approximately 32,000 miles. The boat left New York January 18, touched at Havana, Colon, Balboa, Los Angeles and Honolulu en route to Yokohama. She left Saturday morning for Kobe, arriving there Sunday. She will leave the following Friday for Shanghai. From here the big ship will touch at Hongkong, Manila, Batavia, Rangoon, Calcutta, Colombo, Bombay, the Suez (allowing a three-day stopover in Cairo) Port Said, Haifa, Athens, Naples, Monaco, Cherbourg and thence to New York. She expects to arrive in New York on May 16.

Startling Secrets Read by Science in a Single Hair

Race and Sex Can Be Traced by the Microscope, Which Discloses the Fact That a Hair Has More Individuality Than a Finger-Print

HIGH-POWERED microscopic studies have just revealed to science a wealth of hitherto unknown, unsuspected and startling facts about human hair.

While some of these discoveries will prove of the highest value in the care, treatment and preservation of "woman's crowning glory," and of man's hirsute adornment, too, the most astonishing revelation of all is the fact that hairs, considered singly, have an even greater individuality than finger-prints!

Anybody can tell a straight hair from a curly one, or a blonde hair from that of a brunette. But under the modern microscope, the transverse section of a hair, cut straight through, as one would saw through the trunk of a tree, reveals concentric lines, layers and markings which differ with every head.

The system of crime detection which traces and identifies individuals by their finger-prints is one of the best ever devised by science. But in some ways the hair offers an even more effective method. As the result of these discoveries the great Bertillon himself drew up a classified and graduated table of hair—its color, texture and transverse structure—for use in identification and crime detection throughout the world.

"Henceforth, the burglar who already wears gloves when on the job for fear of leaving finger prints will have to keep his head shaved, too," says a French scientific writer in Le Temps, commenting on the results already achieved.

How hair can reveal more than finger-prints is interestingly explained in detail.

Suppose investigators have on the table before them, under the microscope, the finger-prints of two individuals, whom they do not know and whom they wish to identify. The only thing they can tell from the finger prints is that here are two individuals who leave different marks when they touch an object. They cannot form any picture of the individuals for whom they are looking. They cannot say, "This is a pale-faced, weakly man, of such-and-such coloration and appearance, while the other is a dark-skinned brute, probably very strong and a day-laborer." They cannot always say with certainty, "This person is old or young," or even "This person is a man, and that one a woman."

But suppose, on the other hand, that they have two hairs, and that these are both black, straight, of the same length, and nearly the same texture. After a complete microscopic study, particularly of the transverse cuts through the hair, which present an even greater diversity of rings, layers and structure than the trunk of a growing tree, they can say:

"This first hair is from the head of a woman of about thirty, of the Caucasian race, brunette, slender and physically weak, of a pallid coloration and uneven temperament."

They can say of the other:

"This second hair is that of a Hindu, a man, middle-aged, and probably terrific in strength, but light-skinned rather than dark-skinned for a person of his race."

In other words, they can tell from a single hair the sex, complexion, general physique and physical appearance, and in many cases the precise race to which the individual belongs.

They probably could not tell an Englishman from an American, or a Spaniard from a Frenchman, but they can tell you whether he is Caucasian, Chinese, Hindu, or American Indian, for in these sharply differentiated racial types, they have found corresponding differentiations in the hair structure.

They have found out also what makes a red-headed girl's hair red—and they show in their microscopic pictures the difference between her pigment tubes and those of a girl with ordinary blonde hair. The former are larger and contain more coloring matter. Scientists have found why one girl has naturally straight hair, another wavy, while a third has hair that is naturally curly.

In the matter of the care, preservation and treatment of the hair, these newest discoveries have exploded a few old fallacies, but have confirmed the body of medical opinion on the subject, while adding many interesting fresh facts.

The hair has a life of its own, as completely separate from the life of the individual on whose head it grows as the life of a stalk of wheat is from that of the earth in which it grows. This is most simply shown by the fact that hair will remain alive and actually grow for several days on the head of a person who is dead.

Hair, for that matter, is infinitely stronger, tougher, more vital than wheat or grass or any of the other growing things which it resembles. If a woman gives her hair the same care that a farmer gives his wheat in the field, the proper air, nourishment and cultivation, she can then do things to it that almost no other living growth could stand without destruction—combing, dyeing, crimping, waving, curly, "skinning it" back tightly, training it in fantastic directions.

The reason why there are so many bald-headed men and so few bald-headed women is that while women inflict all these supposed "atrocities" on their hair, they also nourish and cultivate it, while many men do nothing to their hair, either good or bad—they just neglect it completely and let it "go to pot."

Then, when they are bald, they sometimes spend thousands of dollars, and employ many desperate expedients and futile inventions to get their hair back—all useless if they are really bald, for once a human "dome" becomes hard, smooth and shiny, no miracle has yet been discovered by science that will make the hair grow again.

One of the facts which these microscopic studies have confirmed is that too much soap and water are bad for any hair. Natural oil is one of its chief foods. Too much washing removes the oil and devitalizes the follicles. The hair should be thoroughly washed only once every two weeks, and then if there is any lack of natural oil, vaseline or some similar safe substance should be carefully massaged into the scalp around the roots.

Here are some newer facts discovered by the microscope: The "permanent waving," which has been roundly condemned by some people—the same sort of people who erroneously used to condemn cosmetics as injurious to the complexion until science proved them wrong — if properly and carefully performed, does little or no harm to the average hair. Only for the woman who has hair of extraordinarily fine and fragile texture is permanent waving seriously harmful, and at worst, the microscope shows, it is not as bad as the old-fashioned hot curling irons used at home.

In the matter of dyeing or coloring the hair, the microscope has revealed that some forms of this practice are extremely harmful, while others are almost wholly harmless. The woman who uses peroxide to turn her hair lighter is doing her hair the greatest possible injury, because peroxide is not a dye at all, but a powerful chemical bleach that permanently penetrates the entire structure of the hair, destroying natural coloring and vitality alike.

The woman, on the other hand, who resorts to henna, a simple and harmless vegetable dye, if she uses it properly, can do so without destroying the natural vitality of her hair.

And the woman whose hair is gray or turning gray can, with a clear conscience, have it dyed, by an expert, without fear that she will ruin its strength and growth. But it is difficult ever to restore it to the perfect white which is often equally beautiful.

The Winter Wardrobe

FEMININE clothes for every period of the day are fascinating in their variety. Details of costumery indicate the modes which befit the hour, and there are definite distinguishing points between the afternoon gown, for instance, and that which one wears after six.

The evening style may be rich to the point of luxuriance, if one wishes. Or it may adopt the simple charm of classic lines. But it differs from the sleeveless afternoon gown in the neckline, which is lowered to a decollete depth.

Morning hours demand simplicity of attire, if one would be correct.

Photos, Styles Service.

WINTER fashion divides the day into three periods. But during the current season, the bar between afternoon and evening clothes has been lowered a little.

After six, the sleeveless frock comes into its own. The strictly formal gown, however, allows a decided decollete in contrast to the sleeveless mode of the afternoon.

Here is an evening gown of simple splendor. It is almost unadorned, yet it achieves beauty by the use of artful drapery at the back. Soft velvet is wound about the figure and caught into a semi-bustle effect where it trails off into a narrow, pointed train. Two ropes of rhinestone braid catch the bodice at the front and are attached to it at a lower point at the back. From a narrow rope of this trimming hangs a brilliant pendant at the front, silhouetted against its soft background.

The wrap is a style borrowed from the Chinese, with an unusual Oriental design running across the back. Where the lines merge into a snug band at the bottom, the model effects a compromise by suspending a slender silk tassel from the original width. A high fur collar frames the face delightfully and adds the essential touch of impressiveness to this exotic evening wrap.

The pendulum of the mode swings forward to the morning hours, after a late party's gayety. Then one enjoys extreme simplicity. And the homespun variety of frock comes into its own.

Twill is responsible for the foundation of the modern trotteur frock, which has a tunic and deep cuffs of silk fringe.

Tea time calls for its own kind of gown. Here is a model of velvet brocade which is rich in fabric, but plain in design. The front panel, collar and deep cuffs are fashioned of the patterned fabric, while the remainder of the gown shows an artistic contrast in plain chiffon velvet. Rosettes are used as a loose girdle across the patterned panel at the front.

When Madame saunters to her favorite club for tea or perhaps spends her afternoon hours calling, she may wear a three-piece suit of rather intricate trimming. Chinese silk builds the blouse. The coat is lined with similar material. The design is repeated on the coat front, cuffs and lower extremity.

New Electrical Servants Eliminate Woman-Power

Modern Home Incomplete Without Time And Labor Saving Appliances—Expense Very Often Exaggerated

In this day of small apartments, high priced servants, expensive laundry bills and the high price of living, that makes every additional mouth to feed an added burden, the up-to-date housewife has turned to Miss Electricity. Woman-power or electric power, which? How is your home run? Do you utilise the quiet electricity, or do you wear out your own strength on tasks which are a necessary part of every household, but which can easily be done by electricity

The margin of leisure for the homemaker is so narrow that I sometimes wonder at the woman's slowness in adopting electrical appliances," said one man to me. I used to wonder at them, too, but I do so no longer.

Now I know that it is ignorance of the appliances themselves, a misunderstanding of what it means to have a home so perfectly planned—as to house work and mechanical help—that it is not a burden. But most of all I know it is a habit. We do get into a rut in the daily round of homey tasks. There is no denying it, and I firmly believe that is responsible for so many of the "woman power" homes. Then, too, many women have an exaggerated idea as to the cost of electrical appliances; they think it costs a mint of money to buy them and another mint to run them, and they do not take the trouble to investigate.

Then there is the man point of view. I believe the majority of men want their homes as comfortably enquipped as their shops, but there are some who think because their mothers washed by "woman-power," and because their months ironed with old-fashioned sad irons, and because their mothers wore out their lives (and the carpets) with brooms, that their wives should do the same thing. But if those same men had to be the housekeepers there would be such a sudden interest in electrical servants that it would keep every factory running at full blast.

A house can be cleaned with a vacuum cleaner in a third the time it took with broom, dustpan and dusters. The house is thoroughly cleaned, much more sanitary, and best of all, one can be daintily dressed while doing the work. Every house where there is a child should be cleaned with the electric vacuum.

There will be fewer colds and other illnesses due to the thorough removal of all dust and dirt. The rugs and carpets will wear longer and all dust will be removed from the cornices, back of pictures and other places formerly so hard to reach.

The electric washing machine, ironing machine and irons take nine-tenths of the labor out of wash day; the clothes are not washed with hundreds of other families' clothes and the ironing machine takes care of all the flat work and heaps of the other pieces rapidly and with little labor, while the electric iron makes doing the "hand" pieces a joy—one can be cool and comfy instead of bending over a hot stove and having the heat from a heavy iron blowing up into one's tired face.

In short, call in Miss Electricity; you touch a button and she warms your house, she makes your toast and coffee and waffles for breakfast. Your dinner can be cooked in an electric stove; just prepare the meat and vegetables, turn the button and the time clock, and no more trouble until time to "dish up." She washes and irons, cleans your floors and draperies, and leaves no dust behind. She lights the house and the garage. She rings your bells, she can put a permanent wave in your hair, she lights your Christmas tree, she warms up your bed or soothes your pain with warming pad and blanket, and through the vibrator wrinkles are smoothed out and circulation restored. Through the telephone you visit your friends and transact the business of your home, as without electricity there would be no phones. The radio, ultilising her energy, brings you concerts and amusements; she runs your auto, but best of all—

"She's not in your way, she never offends,
She doesn't tell your secrets to all of her friends.
She has no beaux, no desire to roam,
She's the modern servant in the American home."

Earrings For Men!

Elsie McCormick Writes Of New York "Salon Squats" Latest Fad

Miss Elsie McCormick, formerly a member of the staff of THE CHINA PRESS, is now a feature writer for The New York World. The following is reprinted from a recent issue of that newspaper's magazine section.

BY ELSIE McCORMICK

It was at Alexander Archipenko's exhibition of modern sculpture that we saw it. We were moving around the Kingore Galleries, struggling past a fat lady who was dressed, appropriately enough, in crush velvet; stopping for a moment to listen to Joseph Stella's batik necktie; pausing to admire a lady futurist who had bought her necklace in a hardware store; and giving an eye massage to another lady who was wearing a leather dress that might have been passed over the counter of one of our leading tanneries.

We were just constructing in our minds an appropriate article on what the well-dressed cubist will wear. We agreed with ourself that the next time we went to an exhibition sponsored by the Societe Anonyme, we would first string several door-knobs together for a necklace and then combine a few yards of batik with two or three blacksmith's aprons.

Our reverie, however, was rudely broken in upon. Down at the other end of the room something was happening. The first time we looked we thought that the sun had come out. At the second glance, after our eyes had become acclimatised, we realised that what was happening was only a vest. It was a cloth of gold vest trimmed around the edges with amber and turquoise beads, a vest that shone out in the crowd like a good deed on Forty-second and Broadway.

Now, any garment that can silence a room full of batik neckties is some garment. Even the long-limbed ladies created by Mr. Archipenko nearly lost their balance on the pedestals and came down on their noses, or rather, where their noses would have been if they had had anything as realistic as noses.

After sending down to the limousine for our smoked glasses we approached cautiously, holding a potted palm in front of us to diffuse the glare. There, beaming behind the vest, we discovered David Burliak, father of Russian futurism and stepfather of the transfigured waistcoat.

"How and why do you do it?" we inquired, our gaze detaching itself from the vest and rising to the turquoise and coral earring that hung from his right ear.

Mr. Burliak is not as eloquent in English as he is in chest-protectors, but he did his best.

"It is a question of the joy of life," he explained. "If a man wears always black over his heart, how the heart can it sing? Now, I am Russian Tartar. Color I eat; color I breath; therefore color I must wear. Of these vests I have twenty-five; each different; each very happy. You see the Tartar vest I have, over a hundred years old. Red it is, with white coming back and fro like lightning. When I wear it, all nature smiles."

The artist, however, wore the absorbed look of the Ancient Mariner who was—figuratively speaking—getting something off his chest.

"Then another I have that is black, with much gold and buttons of carved ivory," he went on. "You should hear the happy poem it says whenever it is in a room. And than I have another in Japanese silk, with cherry blossoms and bamboo and a so pleasant baby dragon.

"But, oh! my little stock of twenty-five is as nothing. At home I had a hundred and twenty-five, but the Bolshevists came and took them all away."

"Maybe that is what started the revolution," we theorised, looking quite bright. "Anyway, it must have been hard to have lost all your vested interests."

"However, I am sending all the way to Afghanistan for a new one," he said, "and when it comes it will make the rest look like many funerals."

"And the earring?" we inquired.

"That, too, is Tartar," explained Mr. Burliak. "For every waistcoat I have an earring to match. Sometimes for one waistcoat I have several, and I change them to fit the mood. Why should the women only have these lovely things? Myself, I believe in equal rights for men."

Meanwhile, people were gathering around the sartorial arc-light like moths around a lantern. As the conversation widened to many topics we noted how Mr. Burliak worked his earring into harmony with the current remarks. Somebody mentioned Pittsburgh, and an Onyx earring was clamped into place; somebody else mentioned near-beer, and an amber pendant took the place of the black. Really; it was a wonderful system.

Followed by the envious glances of men who would like to but didn't dare, the cream of Tartar sartorial art moved like a passing gleam around the gallery. As he walked he softly chanted fragments of a wild Tartar hymn that was roughly—quite roughly—translated to us as follows: "My vest I don't mind it because I'm behind it; it's the people in front that I jar."

Next day we strolled over to the Merchant Tailor Designers' Association, assembled in convention at the Hotel Pennsylvania, and explained Mr. Burliak's theories of putting a little joy over the heart. When we described some of his garments, one of the leading designers sadly shook his grizzled head.

"We don't want to get into trouble with the fire laws," he murmured; "besides, if everybody went on a color spree what would become of our good friends in the pants and suit business that have a basement full of serge, I want to know? Let 'em wear earrings if they want to, but if they want fancy vests they'll have to get the wife to cut hem out of the cretonne curtains. We're not going to help."

Thus faded the average man's last chance to look like the results of an infernal machine exploding in a paint shop.

Hints On Beauty

Further Rejuvenation

I want to give you a few pointers today about keeping the face "fit" while reducing. The flesh must be kept firm and hard or the loss of flesh will give a flabby look. Each morning, pat in a good skin food, plenty of it, over the face and throat. Then take a piece of ice and rub over the skin for at least ten minutes, especially around the eyes and chin. It is the most refreshing treatment imaginable.

Now do your daily chinning. No, not what you mean—silent chin exercise. Stand erect—draw back the head as far as possible, return to position, five times at first. Then forward and to position five times. To each side and up; then go in a circle five times. Now bring the head to position and tense the jaw, relax five times. Twist the jaw from side to side ten times. After a couple of days, increase all to ten. Here's another: Hold head erect; turn head to the left, keeping it erect, and back to position; then to right and back, five times each.

After this, wipe off the remaining cream and apply your favorite astringent. There are several good ones on the market.

I spoke of your ten minute exercising, but didn't tell you what they were, did I? Try these for the shoulder and back.

Stand erect, raise arms to level of shoulders, clench fists, make small circles, five forward and five back. Increase to ten. Be sure that you feel a pull across the back and neck while doing this or you are not getting the full benefit.

Hold to the diet I gave you last week; that is, have all fruit or all vegetable luncheons, the morning lemon, and simple breakfast, and once a week have a liquid day. You might find this diet a pleasant change from the fruit juices. On rising, the eternal lemon, breakfast, coffee or substitute, and if you must, a piece of zwieback.

About eleven, if you feel yourself sinking, have a glass of milk. For luncheon, a cup of clear soup. During the afternoon, either a glass of milk or a cup of thin cocoa. A cup of soup for dinner, and a glass of milk or fruit juice before retiring.

On the day following this diet be sure to have raw fruit or raw vegetables. The important point in reducing is the reduction of the amount of food you consume. After three "liquid" days your tummy will be somewhat shrunken, and you won't be able to eat as much as formerly; and don't try to. Keep a sharp eye on your rations, and make sure that you are consuming but half to a third as much as you normally do.

SWEETS TABOO

Of course you know what you mustn't eat—sweets, pastries, greases, butter, fried foods, rich salad dressings, starches (potatoes, rice and macaroni), bread, except a little whole wheat or bran bread toasted, about a slice a day.

You may and must eat, practically all vegetables, carrots, beets, string beans, spinach, celery, tomatoes, onions, cauliflower, turnips, etc. Beans, lima beans and peas are rather high, calorically speaking, but may be eaten infrequently as the main part of the meal as a meat substitute. Fish, excepting salmon, is a good food. It should be baked or broiled, of course. Meats, except pork, are not fattening, but I don't think an excess of meat is particularly good for one. Once or twice a week is enough, with fish and fowl and eggs for other meals.

Milk may be taken as a meal; a glass of milk makes an excellent luncheon, if you like it, or buttermilk is a splendid food alone. Fruit, except bananas, should be an important part of your diet. It is good for you and will help fill the large void left by the exclusion of sweets and desserts. Cooked and raw fruits should form your desserts.

A NEW SKIN OVERNIGHT
COMPLEXIONS REMADE WHILE YOU SLEEP

It sounds incredible, but it is just plain truth. Did you know that the epidermis—in other words, the outer layer or scarf-skin of your face—is constantly dying and being replaced by new cells? The dead skin-scales are what give your complexion that dull yellow look which face powder only temporarily disguises. Ask yourself why you use powder, anyway? You would not if you were satisfied with your complexion in its natural state. Just a little quiet thinking will show you that if your skin is undergoing this drying-up, dying-off process there is something you can do to assist Nature in her rejuvenating efforts. The dead scarf-skin will not come away of its own accord. On the contrary, the tiny dead scales clog the pores and cause impurities to form, hiding the perfect skin which is struggling to show itself and to breathe just underneath.

Remove this outer scarf-skin which has served its turn, by applications of mercolised wax. This fragrant compound is a most marvellous discovery, for it dissolves and completely removes the dead discoloured veil, revealing the smooth, clear skin underneath. All facial eruptions and blemishes arise from allowing the dead epidermis to remain. Mercolised wax contains wonderful absorptive properties which clear the complexion while you sleep.

Ask your chemist to supply you with a small quantity and after washing the face in warm water, apply it as you would any ordinary face cream, and do not wash it off until the morning. If you do this every night on retiring, for ten days or so, you will see amazing results.

Mother Goose Gives Party For Li'l Miss Muffet

BY PRUDENCE, JR.

A friend of mine gave a birthday party for her five-year old daughter. It was a Mother Goose party, and, as most times, the entire assemblage would appear as Little Bo Peeps, and Little Jack Horners, she decided to do a little suggesting. So her invitations ran:—"Little Miss Muffet requests the pleasure of Simple Simon's company, at her birthday party, Thursday afternoon, November sixth, at two o'clock." Thus, by naming each guest in the invitation, she achieved variety.

Children's costumes may be very easily and inexpensively made. Cheese cloth, tarlatan, and even crepe paper, work up charmingly. For a "little feller," a Baby Bunting costume is adorable, and can be made of cotton flannel. Red Riding Hood, (though not exactly Mother Goose, is usually admitted to Goose circles) is an easy one too. A red flannel cape, and hood over a white frock, and of course, the basket on her arm. Simple Simon must have his line and bucket. Tommie Tucker should be reminded that he must sing for his supper. If there is a "set" of brother and sister among your guests, you might invite "Cinderella and the Prince." Use your own judgment about "casting"; suggest simple roles to those who have little time or means, and be sure that Tommy Tucker does sing.

DECORATIONS

For decorations, make cut-outs of the different characters and paste them on large sheets of pastel cardboard. Keep your coloring dainty, in pale greens, pinks, blues and yellows, with the black silhouette. Make crepe shades for your light, with small cut-outs pasted on the insid. Be sure to represent every character invited, so that no one will fell neglected.

My friend's little daughter received with her mother. Then an assistant ushered each child to his place. Miss Muffet to her tuffet, where a paper spider and her bowl (though not of curds and whey) awaited her.

Humpty-Dumpty, to a small but solid table, made to look like a wall, with paper painted in brick and vines hanging over.

Simple Simon was given a high stool and a small washtub or bucket. For the children who had no special "location" a toy was waiting for him at his place; they all sat on pillows at this party. Red Riding Hood found a wolf in a nightcap beside her pillow; Baby Bunting a rabbit; Little Bo Peep, a sheep; Jack Horner, a pie, with marbles inside instead of plums, and so forth.

This "broke the ice" and kept the early arrivals happy and amused until the entire party had gathered.

GAMES

Then they played the old games like "London Bridge" "Musical Chairs," "Drop the Handkerchief" and "Ring Around A' Rosy." Mother Goose was pasted on a sheet, and hung on the wall; she had a headless goose with her, on a string. Each child, in turn, was blindfolded, given a paper head and a pin, led to the wall, where he endeavored to pin the head where geese usually wear them. It is a variation of pinning the tail on the donkey, and loads of fun. After that refreshments were served. There were cocoa with marshmallow on top, and chicken sandwiches cut in animal shapes, ice cream, sponge cake and sugar cookies.

It was a charming little affair, the children had a wonderful time, and the hostess was not wrecked, either nervously or financially.

Why Not A Distinguishing Mark For Owner Driven Cars

By Westa

A suggestion has been made that all owner driven motor cars in Shanghai should carry a special mark—such as a white circle on the windshield—as part of a plan to break up the petty thievery to which the owners of such cars are constantly subjected.

It is argued that such a distinguishing mark would be of great aid to the police in breaking up these thefts, in that they would know, instantly, if they saw a chauffeur tampering with a car so marked that he had no right to do so. Other motorists, too, would know that thieves were at work if they say anybody taking an article from such a car, and could call the police.

The greatest advantage of such a mark, however, would be the moral effect it would have upon the thieves. A chauffeur bent upon robbing a car would fear that if he tampered with such a car he might be seen, and this fear would go a long way toward restraining him. As it is now a chauffeur or other thief, assuming he knows something of the habits of the owner, knows that he can steal from an unattended car with absolute impunity. He knows that if he is seen taking a rug, tools or other accessory from a car, that those who see him will think nothing of it, and so go on about their business.

A mark such as a white circle on the windshield would be, in effect, an eye, and every thief would know that to tamper with such a car would be courting detection and arrest.

It might be argued against such a plan that it would serve to advertise the unattended car, but this is hardly a logical argument in view of the fact that the thieves, particularly if they are chauffeurs, know well enough which cars are owner driven, and therefore unattended. The average Chinese thief has too much cunning to steal from a car blindly; that is, without knowing pretty well who the car belongs to and where that owner is at the moment. These thieves do not steal at random, nor do they take a chance of having the owner come upon them while they are making a "lift" from his car. They do not take such chances.

There is an automobile club in this town and it would seem that this organization ought to show some signs in activity in breaking up the present epidemic of thefts. At home the lead in such work as this always is taken by the automobile clubs. That, in fact, is one of the chief duties of the club—to devise ways and means of assisting the authorities in protecting the interests of motorists in every way possible.

It is unfortunate that motorists here do not have an active organization to take the lead in movements calculated to make motoring more satisfactory. There are many reforms that such a club could accomplish.

In the absence of an active and energetic auto club it is up to the motorists themselves to protect their mutual interests. The best method is through organisation, and it is to be hoped that the car owners will "get together" soon. Many things need to be done, and these things can be accomplished only by organised effort.

For Repairing Motor Tire Pumps

The leather which forms the piston of a tire pump is rather difficult to form without some sort of fixture for the purpose, says the Automobile Digest. The leather used for most pumps is about three thirty-seconds inch thick and can readily be formed by means of a hardwood block which is drilled to size of the pump cylinder and counterbored to the diameter necessary to form the piston. This counterbore should be centered with the hole and a plug is then turned to a diameter about three-sixteenths inch smaller than the hole in the block. For most all cases the leather and the counterbore will have to be about three-quarters of an inch larger than the diameter of the pump cylinder and in order to simplify the forming of the piston, the leather should be trimmed to a feather edge. Sole leather makes the best piston and should be soaked in water until very soft then lay into the counterbore so as to center it, finally with a heavy hammer drive the plug into position. Allow the leather and plug to remain in the fixture for several hours, piercing the hole in the center after it is removed.

Foreign Motor Trade Outlook For 1924 Is Good

United Kingdom, South Africa, And Australia Are Particularly Promising For Sales

Washington, Jan. 26.—The quarterly sales survey thus far received from the foreign representatives of the Department of Commerce indicates that 1924 will be a good year for American exports of automotive products. The outlook in the United Kingdom, South Africa and Australia are particularly promising. Distinct improvements have also been noted in trade conditions of India, Czecho-Slovakia and Austria. While France does not offer as promising a market for American products, 1924 is expected to be good from the domestic point of view. The situation in Italy is less favorable than in other countries from which reports have been received.

The British motor car industry is in a more satisfactory position than it has been for some years and it is expected that 1924 will prove even a better year than 1923. Although sales during the last quarter were somewhat less than during the third quarter, lower prices have stimulated sales of British and foreign cars. A large increase in sales is expected during the coming quarter in the light British cars and well-known American makes. It has been estimated that the sales in 1924 will total about 100,000 passenger cars, trucks, and motor cycles.

With average weather conditions the season will be early. British manufacturers and importers of American cars are making preparation for heavy spring sales, and larger stocks than usual have been accumulated in preparation for the expected improvement in market conditions. The spring and summer seasons are expected to absorb the greatest part of the sales.

ITALIAN PRODUCTION

Some uncertainty as to the future demand for Italian motor vehicles is shown by recent developments in the industry. The Fiat company has reduced its production somewhat, owing to general seasonal slackness and to the fact that European markets appear to be somewhat limited. The demand for closed cars has ended, and orders for open cars for summer have not materialised. The present high duty permits very few foreign cars to be imported, so domestic manufacturers have but little outside competition, and the Italian automobile manufacturers appear to find an inadequate market for their production in the domestic market. The motor-cycle demand, however, seems to be still expanding. The demand for heavier American motor-cycles has been extremely good in most cases where their sales have been vigorously pushed.

Sales of automobiles and motor-cycles during the last quarter of 1923, in Austria, were less than in any other quarter of the year. This is normally the slow season, and business in general was reported rather dull. The sales of American cars have been particularly small, owing to the fact that only recently have the American companies been represented, and only one firm has had its agency there throughout the year. It is reported that approximately 170 American cars were sold during 1923. The European cars having the best sale during the quarter were the Amli car, Mathis, Tatra-Nesselsdorf (Czecho-Slovakia) and Wanderer (German).

The first quarter of 1924 is expected to show an improvement in the market for light cars. Dealers estimate that sales during the present year may total over 600 American cars, and possibly 1,000 light delivery trucks. It is generally believed that the greater part will be sold during the first six months of the year. The sale of medium and high-priced American cars will probably be very much restricted by the increase in the Austrian customs tariff, which becomes effective next March. The tariff changes have but little effect on lowpriced cars.

Although British motor-cycles than American machines, the latter are well established and are sold more widely in Austria have met with favor among the purchasers. The sales prospects for 1924 are generally considered good.

INDIA'S MARKET IMPROVES

In the period from July 1 to the end of October, 1923, a distinct improvement was noted in the turnover of automotive stocks in India, and there was a new tone of optimism characterising the reports of dealers and sub-agents on the outlook in their several coast and interior territories. The overstocks have been greatly reduced. In a few markets old models are still in the hands of dealers, but the situation is much less serious than was the case in 1922. It is significant that in spite of a greater number of passenger cars imported in 1923 the value of the imports fell off.

Approximately 80 percent of the cars imported in the first ten months of 1923 were from the United States and Canada. Great Britain is the second largest supplier of automobiles to this market. The general tendency since 1922 has been for the percentage of American cars sold in India to increase.

During the third quarter of 1923 the Australian market for automotive products continued to be good, showing an improvement over the preceding quarter. This was contrary to the general trade conditions and the winter season apparently had no adverse effect on sales. Though there is keener competition each quarter and more or less general price reduction, stocks of automotive products are never heavy and a very large quantity of imports are sold before arrival. The United States continues to easily hold first place in both passenger cars and commercial vehicles. England ranks second in popularity and is the only competitor of any importance. A few French and Italian makes of light cars and trucks are being sold.

AMERICAN QUOTA INCREASED

The sale of automotive vehicles in Czecho-Slovakia is limited by a quota fixed by the Czecho-Slovak Government. Since the United States Government received the benefit of the most-favored-nation clause in the tariff treaty, the quota of American cars has been increased from fifteen to thirty-three per month. The selling season for 1923 had practically closed before November 1, and the local agents were unable to take advantage of this increase in the quota, but they will benefit by it when the season commences in 1924. The method of assessing tariff duties by the Czecho-Slovak Government has caused much confusion and made it difficult for representatives to import cars. If the existing obstacles can be overcome the market offers a substantially increased opportunity for the sale of American cars during 1924.

The sale of American motor vehicles in France continues to be seriously handicapped by the depreciated value of the franc.

Brake Clearance Should Be Small

When adjusting brakes it is well to remember that the smallest amount of clearance which still fails to cause binding under any running condition is the best; usually 1-32 of a inch is sufficient, says the Automobile Digest. The method of determining the proper clearance depends upon the arrangement of the brake linkage. On some cars, brakes which are given sufficient clearance when the car is empty, will bind severely even before the full load is carried. On other cars, the opposite condition prevails, the brake clearance increasing with an increase in weight of the load. On some cars, the brake may have sufficient clearance when carrying the full load on a smooth road, but on an uneven road the up and down motion of the body may cause an alternate binding and releasing of the brakes. A brake which should be avoided is adjusting the brakes while the rear of the car is supported on jacks, as the car is not in its general running position. This condition is especially bad should one side of the car be jacked up higher than the other. The best method is to adjust the brakes on the road, with the car running under the most severe operating conditions which may be encountered.

Many New Models, Some Revealing Great Value, Exhibited At N. Y. Show

Old Line Companies Giving Astonishing Return For Money In New Cars; Expert Reviews Offerings

BY CAPT. VICTOR BEVERIDGE

The new home of the New York Automobile Exhibition is in a huge armory building some 600 feet long by 300 feet in width. Tastefully decorated, the great hall presented a wonderful appearance with its myriad lights reflected from the shining metal and burnished bodies of the cars on display.

In spite of the enormous sales enjoyed by automobile manufacturers there is at the moment a feeling somewhat akin to fear in the minds of many of the lesser manufacturers. The astounding value, I can use no other words, offered by the large corporations in their cars is only possible because raw materials are purchased by ten thousand ton lots and converted into motor cars at the rate of a thousand or more per day.

Roughly there are today about 110 motor manufacturers of assembly plants in the United States of America, yet 90 percent of the finished cars are produced by six corporations, that leaves the remaining ten per cent to over one hundred manufacturers. Of course, the inclusion of the Ford Company in this total makes it slightly misleading, for over half of these American products bears the Ford name plate. Still the movement is all towards the eventual elimination of the smaller makers and before many years pass I think the trade will have drifted into the hands of about a dozen large corporations.

The chief topic of conversation centers around the four wheel brake development. Packard certainly started something when they set the fashion by fitting these to their "Single Eight" and now, at the show, they produce a refined new model of their famous "Single Six" also fitted with the four wheel system. A glance around the show convinces one that Packard have set the fashion for more than four wheel brakes, the Packard radiator having been adopted by a number of companies almost without a change.

Next comes the balloon tire and it almost appears as if this were going to be universally accepted. For the secondary roads these tires are certainly much to be desired for they seem to even out the rough places in a remarkable way. I am not so sure that they mean much on the first class concrete highways. Also, on the smaller cars they seem to give a heavy look which, no doubt, will pass away when we become accustomed to their larger size.

NEW BODY LINES

To my mind, perhaps the most significant thing is the greater attention now being paid to graceful body lines and more comfortable upholstery. In other years with the exception of the expensive cars, it too often seemed as if the man who designed the engine also designed the body, both grace and comfort being conspicuous by their absence. Now all that is changed and there is little to choose between the American and European style of coach-work. Indeed, it almost seems as if the designers have copied the best European practice and the American motorist will be the gainer.

Most of the manufacturers fit their cars far more completely with dashboard instruments, shock absorbers, and, in the case of the Packard Single Eight, even bumpers are part of the standard equipment.

As usual, at show time, many manufacturers have their models also on show in the entrance halls of the big city hotels and this year, when it takes a half hour to get from the city to the Armory in the Bronx, where the show is held, these side exhibits seem more than ever popular. I fancy quite a few visitors will content themselves with the hotel shows, and give up the attempt to reach the real exhibition at its rather unaccessible location.

WHITE'S NEW CAR

Two entirely new models are creating quite a stir in the motor world and both are to be seen at the Commodore Hotel. The first and most popular is the "Rollin" with a four cylinder engine and backed by some of the most experienced executives in the trade. The engine, a high speed one, follows European practice, and with disc wheels, four wheel brakes, balloon tires and many other attractive features the new Rollin seems to me to have a very promising future. It is sponsored by Mr. Rollin H. White, one of the founders of the White Motor Company of which he was Vice-President and Chief Engineer. The price from $975, for the touring model to $1,275 for the four door sedan is astonishing.

The other new-comer is the "Chrysler Six" fitted with shock absorbers, hydraulic four wheel brakes and generally appearing to be an excellent looking engineering job with clean lines and well finished construction. Selling around $1,200 for touring models, some of the older established medium priced sixes will have to look to their laurels if this new model is not going to give their salesmen many anxious moments when it comes to signing on the dotted line.

Another innovation is called the "Meritas" fabric for body building. A Packard is shown which has been driven twenty thousand miles and the fabric still seems as spic and span as when it left the works. It is claimed that great lightness is secured for closed bodies but whether it will stand the rough usage of ordinary touring I am not prepared to say. A Ford is shown in closed type with Meritas fabric and certainly for the first time in my life I didn't recognise the flivver chassis at first glance.

MORE ENCLOSED MODELS

To return to the show generally, the trend of public demand is unmistakeably towards the entirely closed model and it seemed to me that many of the touring types were fitted with permanent tops so that when the side curtains are up a practically enclosed car is the result. This is not to be wondered at as the car in America is so thoroughly a necessity for all-the-year-round use that only where closed car comfort can be obtained is a machine sure of general acceptance.

When I say that I saw over a dozen closed models for sale at less than $1,000, it will be realised how far manufacturers have gone in the way of meeting the popular demand.

The old dead black enamel is gradually being displaced by a range of colors which can be sprayed on and dried quickly and which look as effective as paint work. I am told that this new coloring will last two or three years without suffering from the effects of exposure to the weather. Certainly it makes for a gayer looking world where an unending stream of black was rather depressing.

That the sixes are gaining in popularity is obvious if one forgets the Ford in computing averages. There were only two sixes under the $1,000 mark a year ago ago and there are now a good dozen to choose from at that price.

SMALLER ENGINES

Engines are being reduced in size but increased in efficiency with the result that there are savings all around on the bill for gasoline. And not only are they being made smaller but they are being finished with greater care and precision, all of which tends to longer life and ever cheapening costs of operating the car.

With Packard giving up the famous twin six the last of the twelve cylinder engines disappears, but one hears still many a Packard owner saying that he will keep his twin six until it falls to pieces and that time is so far distant that I expect the next century will find a few still on the road.

The V type seems to be on its way too, the Cadillac is its most prominent exponent and the Lincoln is a worthy companion, but when one compares the complexity of the opposed four to the clean lines of the straight eight unconsciously one leans towards the simpler looking type and it seems as if the straight eight must be a more economical manufacturing proposition.

The four wheel brakes which are shown make one furiously to think. Those companies which experimented for a long time with the new system discovered its many weaknesses and overcame the drawbacks before putting it into production. However, so great was the enthusiasm for these brakes that many makers have rushed in with crude untried types which seem to be fated to give endless trouble. I have seen several instances already where the brakes, failing to act produced disasterous results.

Another problem, which has had much consideration, is the elimination of engine vibration, balanced crankshafts, double fly wheels and every possible stunt has been used to overcome the bugbear of periodicity. In one or two cases perfect success has resulted but for the most part you can still get the "trembles" when driving around 30 miles per hour.

BALLOON TIRES COMING

While the balloon tire is shown as yet on only a few of the models on exhibition I am sure the comfort they promise will make them almost universal, as soon as the necessary changes are made on mud guards and steering units, which I suppose will be slightly affected by the larger tires. It is, of course, as yet doubtful what length of tire life may be expected from the big tires but doubtless whatever may be the weakness they develop the tire makers will correct such faults as may show themselves.

I was amused, as the days passed at the show, how I became so accustomed to the look of the big tires that gradually the smaller ones came to look odd and inadequate. Memory went back over the years to the time when the pneumatic came to displace the solid tires on our bicycles and the absurd look the first air tires had. Time flies, my friends, in those days of which I write there were no motor cars at all.

So much for my general impressions, I will now briefly touch

Dear Sirs,

I notice from your "Chevrolet" advertisements in the local press that you give the mileage per gallon as 20. It may interest you to know that the "Chevrolet Special", which I bought from you on October 26th last is now averaging 21 to the gallon, and this during the coldest months of the year, and driven entirely by a Chinese Chauffeur.

I have also pleasure in placing on record my appreciation of the "Service" under the 12 months guarantee, and the expert advice and assistance which I get from you.

on the principal exhibits as they appealed to me.

By common consent the Packard stand was given pride of place, first because a beautiful sports model "Single Eight" painted a French grey lined with blue, with disc wheels and wonderful upholstery was undoubtedly the finest car in the whole exhibition and next because of the fact that both the Single Eight and the Single Six with four wheel brakes were making their first show appearance. It is unnecessary for me to enumerate the features of those two models since they have received such world wide publicity that I can tell nothing new about them. To that here the four wheel brakes fashion and to have had their radiator copied by a dozen firms is quite enough popularity for one firm. I am not so sure that the flattery of imitation is appreciated by the great Detriot firm.

CADILLAC PROMINENT

Next in order of importance was the Cadillac exhibit and that there are still admirers of the "V" type eights was apparent from the interested crowds always collected on the stand. Perhaps the complication of the opposed type is more apparent than real yet it certainly seems as if engine adjustments must be rather difficult to carry out on this type of engine. Nothing could be more perfect than the mechanical precision on this chassis and the four wheel brakes with which Cadillac equips their cars seem to me to be one of the few really reliable ones seen.

Marmon, as ever, stage a remarkably fine lot of high class machines and the comfort of their body work is notable. Here four wheel brakes and balloon tires are strongly in evidence. I did not see much change in the engine design—but then so good a power plant as has ever been the Marmon feature needs little alteration.

Studebaker next catches the eyes and here again there seems to be little alteration on the engines which have made so many friends for the "light six" idea. But one is struck with the fact that here the four wheel brakes are missing. Not so long ago the Studebaker Company spent much good money telling the world that in 1924 they would have nothing to do with four wheel brakes—that they would not be fitted to Studebakers in this year. I thought at the time that was a mistaken step. It did not sell a single car. It did not stop the popular demand for the four wheel brakes and today the company is placed on the horns of a dilemma, either they will lose thousands of sales for the want of four wheel brakes or they will climb down from their position.

This year of grace is going down into automobile history as the "Four Wheel Brake Year."

NEW DODGE MODELS

Dodge Brothers cars again show a wonderful advance, both mechanically and in their general appearance. I am astonished each year at the progress of these cars. There is never any suggestion of retiring on laurels already won but always, it seems to me, as if their value leaps forward from year to year and looking at this season's showing one is almost tempted to say "Why pay more when you can buy a Dodge."

Our old friend Pierce Arrow has a big showing of fine models. I always think of these as so settled in design that their makers are content to leave well enough alone. After all Pierce Arrow owners are a conservative class to whom change apparently is not agreeable or necessary. Four wheel brakes of course are here.

Willys-Overland and Willys-Knight together make a brave show and the numbers turned out from the big Toledo plant are sufficient evidence that fine value and consistent service will always secure its due reward. The Willys-Knight is today one of the most popular medium priced cars made in America and justly so.

I looked in vain, for the electric vehicle and the steam car; both seem to have given up the fight and retired into the background, at least so far as making any appeal for public patronage is concerned.

ONLY ONE AIR-COOLED CAR

The Franklin was the only air-cooled engine I saw and it seems to carry on very well. From year to year I see fresh improvements but it fights a lone fight for real recognition. This I do know, that Franklin owners swear by their cars to a man and I think it is mostly prejudice that keeps the air-cooled engine confined to one really successful model.

I liked the look of the Richenbacker very much. It has the courage of blazing a trail for itself in many directions, and it was a good second to Packard in the introduction of four wheel brakes, and its two flywheels on the engine shaft certainly keep down vibration.

Buick of course was a magnet which few could escape and while I have a certain objection to one of its features I must say that no one who is in the market for a car of its price can possibly pass it by. Away back in the early years I had a car of this make and I remember it almost lovingly for the fine service it gave. Here in America the streets teem with this make and with its four wheel brakes it is always a good buy.

Chevrolet seems to take on new life with each passing year and I question if in the low price division, any car even approaches it for actual value. Many have tried where Chevrolet has succeeded. Only immense output can enable such value to be given.

The Hupmobile at last has given a little more thought and care to its body designs and the couchwork on the Hupmobile requires no excuse. At this time of day it would be superfluous to praise the mechanical excellence of this car. It has proved its excellence the world over.

GOOD VALUE FOR MONEY

It would be invidious to say that I have exhausted the list of worth while cars. I have made no attempt to do so but have written of my impressions in a vagrant sort of way. Chandler and Cleveland, Maxwell, Jordan, the Durant line Star, Flint and Durant are all attractive. Indeed it is safe to say that the purchaser of any car shown will receive good value for the money asked.

It is easy to see that the manufacturers realise that 1924 is going to be a highly competitive one. Every nerve has been strained to turn out attractive cars, workmanship has improved, comfort has been studied in every direction and I say, without the possibility of contradiction, that there is today no article of use offered for sale that gives as much actual value for the money spent as the automobiles I saw in the Bronx armory.

For a wonderfully organised show I would pay my compliments to Mr. Wiles for his faultless exhibition and for the graceful decorations which added to the dignity of the exhibition.

Fortynine Percent Of Cars And Trucks Bear Henry's Name

Approximately forty-nine per cent of the passenger cars and trucks produced in the United States during the first ten months of 1923 were Fords.

This is shown by a comparison of the automobile production figures given out by the U. S. Department of Commerce and those of the Ford Motor Company here.

The department's figures on cars and trucks, the latter including fire apparatus and street sweepers, shows a total of 3,396,638 for the first ten months.

Ford production figures for the same period, which include, as those of other companies, cars and trucks made here for assembly in foreign countries, total 1,639,374. This total, however, does not include the production of the plant at Manchester, England, which manufactures practically all of its parts and which produced 27,606 cars and trucks during the first ten months, nor does it include the ten-month output of 69,452 cars and trucks by the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd.

A comparison of the truck production figures shows that 62 precent were Fords. The total number of trucks turned out during the ten months from January 1 to November 1 was 220,285 with Ford truck production for the same time totaling 200,998.

By this spring the Ford Motor Company will have completed an immense new factory at Copenhagen, Denmark, which will be one of the finest in Europe, introducing in that part of the world new standards in design and operation.

The growth of the Copenhagen assembly plant since its opening in June 1919, has been remarkable and it is now the second largest among the foreign companies, first place being held by the plant at Manchester England.

A total of thirteen countries are served by Copenhagen. These include Denmark, Iceland, Faroe Island, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Free State of Danzig, Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Ukraine and Germany.

The demand for Ford cars during the present year has been particularly good in the three Scandianavian countries, Denmark, Norway and Sweden and the Fordson Tractor has come into extensive agricultural use.

Construction work on the new plant at Copanhagen is well under way. The site, covering four and a half acres, is admirably situated on the south harbor of Copenhagen. The building is being erected so that ocean freighters coming up the North Sea can dock on two sides of it, permitting direct delivery of assembly material from the Manchester plant and from Detroit, via New York. Railroad service also will be direct to the property.

The new building is 400 feet long by 300 feet wide. The outer section is two stories high with an inner court of one story with daylight roof. All stock will be moved on conveyers. The second floor will be devoted to an exclusive body-making department.

Auto Plants To Have Big Output For 1924, Report

All Factories Prepare For Increased Production

Announcement by the Ford Motor Company that expansion of the world's largest automobile company will require an investment ranging from $110,000,000 to $115,000,000 is convincing evidence of Henry Ford's faith in the automotive industry for 1924. The summary includes many projects begun last year and scheduled for completion this year, and others will be started within the next sixty days. The program is the most ambitious ever undertaken by the Ford company.

WEST COAST PREPARED

"The West Coast is regarded as especially well prepared to handle the large volume of business expected in 1924," the announcement says. "As a result of the additions made to the Los Angeles assembling and manufacturing plant during the year, increasing its output nearly 10 percent. Springs, cushions and seat backs are being manufactured here in addition to all the closed bodies used on the Pacific Coast."

Announcement of a proposed extension to the manufacturing units and railroad facilities at Highland Park disposes of consistent rumors that Ford is planning to move the Highland Park plant to the River. Rumors have been afloat that Ford was anxious to group all his interests on the Rouge, and that the General Motors Corporation would take over the Highland Park factories.

OPTIMISM GENERAL

Ford is not alone in his optimism over the prospects of the industry in 1924. An expansion program that calls for an expenditure of $2,500,000, and which will enlarge the plant to take care of an increased daily production of 1000 cars at the Flint Chevrolet Motor Car Company plant, is announced by Charles P. Barth, general manager. The present capacity is 2,000 cars daily. The extension means an increase in working force of about 2000 men, Barth declared. Much property adjacent to the plant was acquired last week.

The plans also include the transferring of the company's steering gear factory in Muncie, Ind., to Flint. Recent building improvements included the erection of a new office building and several machinery buildings.

"Rearrangement of the motor plant is about complete," Barth said. "The highest type of machinery designed to speed up work of building motors has been installed and a more economical and efficient operation now will result."

John N. Willys, president of the Willys Overland Company, is another giant who has unbounded faith in the future of the industry. After a year of wonderful achievement, in which Willys produced more than 200,000 cars, the Toledo manufacturer states Willy-Overland expects to break every one of its 1923 records in 1924 with a production which at present indicates a probable sale of 300,000 cars.

CHANDLER OUTPUT TO BE LARGER

Schedule of the Chandler Motor Car Company for 1924 contemplates the production of from 22,500 to 25,600 cars. Of this number it is expected to turn out 10,000 in the first quarter. High production for the first quarter, according to officials of the company, is for the purpose of meeting the spring demand. This year, it is shown, the company produced 16,000 cars in the eleven months that have passed and the total for the year is expected to appregate 17,500.

LEONARD GOES TO WILLYS-OVERLAND

H. J. Leonard, vice-president of the Stephens Motor Car Company of Freeport, Illinois, has resigned his position after years of service to become an executive of the Willys Overland Company. Resignation was effective January 14. In his new position he will be under the direction of President John N. Willys at the Toledo plant of the Willys Overland.

PAIGE SALES INCREASE

The increase in Paige and Jewett sales during the month of December over the same period of 1922, approximately 85 percent, is taken as a forecast of what is to be expected during 1924, according to President H. M. Jewett.

"November sales exceeded those of the previous November by a fraction over 100 percent," said Jewett. "December sales maintained the same approximate average of increase. The wonderful growth in sales of the same two months in 1923 over that period of 1922 was our first inkling of what to expect during the year ahead.

"Our expectations were of a most optimistic nature. We were not disappointed. Judging from what we now see I believe I can safely predict that 1924 will be the biggest year the automobile business has ever seen."

NEW PACKARDS

Packard Motor Car Company plant is running to capacity and enough single sixes of the new model just announced have been built to permit shipments to all parts of the country. Four wheel brakes and a number of other important features and refinements are incorporated in this new model. Machanical simplicity and resulting economy of both operation and upkeep of former single six models have been retained as have the beauty of both the body lines and finish and comfort in riding. The wheel base remains the same, 126 and 132 inches and there is no change in the motor.

The fuelizer, an exclusive Packard feature, which is declared to make starting easy and to add greatly to gasoline economy, also is found in the new model.

Packard largely was responsible for the operation of four wheel brakes in this country pioneering them in its straight eight announced early in the year. Since the advent of the straight eight Packard engineers have been at work on the new single six model adapting the four wheel brake system to it.

S.A.E. TO GO TO DETROIT

In transferring the annual sessions of the Society of Automotive Engineers from New York to Detroit, there are persistent rumors in automotives circles that this presages a further centering of automobile interests in the Detroit district. For some time past there have been rumors that a third national automobile show will be held and that Detroit would be the city. Several factories are said to have influenced officials of the S. A. E. to hold their sessions in Detroit rather than in New York, where they always previously have been held. One of the chief reasons is believed to have been the location of New York, which was not central as compared to the automobile manufacturing districts and made journeys too costly for factories to send more than a couple of representatives.

CONTIENTAL MOTORS PROFIT

For the fiscal year ending October 31 last, the Continental Motors Corporation, world's largest manufacturers of automobile engines, reports $3,886,-195.62 in profits from operations before deducting interest charges, depreciation and provisions for Federal and profits taxes.

Interest charges were $497,-547.22 and allowance for depreciation was $1,208,195.15, leaving a net profit of $2,189,-453.25 for the year before providing for Federal taxes, with balance sheet showing total of $34,748,608.95 on October 31, against $31,453,512.67 a year ago. "Substantial and healthy progres has been made during the fiscal year," says President R. W. Judson in a statement accompaying the report. "The full measure of this progress is not reflected in the statement of earnings.

"During the year 227,00 motors were manufactured and sold—more than twice the output in any previous year. A conservative estimate of 300,000 motors of all types for the current fiscal year is expected."

FRIGHT BY MOTOR TRUCK

It is only a question of time before the motor truck surpasses the freight car as a carrier of tonnage. For covering distances varying from twenty-five to 150 miles the truck is proving to have great advantage over the railroad. With the increase of good roads all communities are now linked by this new means of transportation.

Last year the railroads carried 1,642,541,000 tons of freight. It will come as a surprise to most people to learn that in the same time motor trucks carried 1,430,000,000 tons. With the improvement of roads the motor truck traffic will increase steadily and there is a tendency to increase the trucking distance to several hundred miles.

The automobile bus crowded with school children is also becoming very familiar, not only in the cities, but in remote sections of the country. The radius over which school children may now be gathered for school is being steadily windened. Every year these bus lines carry children to about twelve thousand schools and the service is growing rapidly. It is estimated that upward of 25,000,000 school children ride in school busses annually.

General Motors To Make Partners Of Executives

The stockholders of the General Motors Corporation have recently approved a plan by which it is sought to identify the interests of the stockholders and executives of the General Motors Corporation. About seventy of the principal executives of General Motors Corporation will be given an opportunity to acquire a substantial stock interest in the Corporation under the plan.

Through a company to be known as the Managers Securities Company, General Motors will make it possible for these ment to purchase 2,250,000 shares of common stock, having a present value in excess of $93,000,000. This is the most far reaching effort ever made by a large corporation to provide a complete identification of the interests of management and stockholders through having the managers become large stockholders themselves.

This plan is designed to solve the most important problem with which large corporations have to deal, that is the insurance of the permancy of sound and efficient management. This problem is accentuated in the case of General Motors by the fact that its operations are so diversified, being conducted through many different divisions operating in all parts of the world. The Directors are confident that through the adoption of this plan, many economies not now obtainable will be realized and that the total cost of administering the Corporation's affairs will be less than under the previous plan of operation.

The Managers Securities Company will be controlled by the executives of eGneral Motors who are accorded the privilege of becoming stockholders. The Company will acquire General Motors stock up to the amount mentioned above at the rate of $2.20 per share in cash and the balance in its non-voting, seven percent preferred stock. This preferred stock will be gradually retired, thus leaving the original stockholders in possession of the assets of the company consisting of 2,250,000 shares of common stock, plus cash contributions of the General Motors Corporation and accumulated dividends on the stock.

The contribution of General Motors Corporation to the plan consists of a payment annually to the Managers Securities Company of five percent of its net earnings after deducting therefrom seven percent of the capital employed.

This new plan rounds out the policy of General Motors of enabling all of its employees to have a financial interest in the Corporation, depending upon their position. For those who are not eligible to become members of the Managers Securities Company, there are two other plans in effect at the present time, that is, a bonus system and a Savings and Investment Fund.

Under the latter plan employees may deposit with the Corporation a proportion of their salaries, the Corporation paying compound interest at the rate of six percent on these deposits. In addition, over a period of five years, the Corporation contributes a sum equivalent to one-half of the savings of each employee.

The Federal Tax On Motor Vehicles

While the Congress of the United States is considering plans for tax reduction, including the recommendation by Secretary Mellon for repeal of some of the "nuisance" or "luxury" taxes, such as that on theatrical admissions, it would appear that the abolishment or substantial reduction of the special tax on motor vehicles might well be provided for. This tax, which adds directly to the cost of motor cars, trucks, tires and repair parts, was imposed as a war-revenue measure, and now that American budget conditions permit of lowered taxes in the interest of the consumers, there would seem to be no good reason why it should be retained. About one-third of all the motor cars in the United States are owned by farmers, to whom the added costs of the tax on the car, and on tires and repair parts, is a very considerable burden. The millions of farmers to whom the motor vehicle is a necessity, not a luxury, would welcome lower prices and cheaper repair parts. Nothing in the proposal for tax reduction so far submitted to the Congress would so directly result in immediate savings to many millions of persons of average means.

Special taxes on motor trucks are nothing less than a tax on the distribution of goods, both of farm products to markets and manufactures to the farms. With the constant extension of improved roads, the service rendered by motor transport is steadily increasing, and has become an important factor in handling an enormous volume of all kinds of local and suburban freight. A tax that increases the cost of means of transportation is, of course, passed on to the shipper or consumer, and adds just so much to the price of articles transported. While the saving through the repeal of these transportation taxes might in the individual case be small, in the aggregate it would amount to many millions of dollars, and would be a contribution to that much-desired reduction in the cost of living for which everyone is looking.

Motor vehicles are now, in many states, subject to triple taxation: First, the federal tax; then the state license tax, and in many communities they are assessed as "personal property," on which the prevailing local tax rate is imposed. A proposition to put a special tax on locomotives, passenger or freight cars, and to require railway companies to pay another tax as a license for their operation, would be flouted by legislative bodies. There would seem to be no good reason for maintaining a special federal tax on transportation of freight or passengers by small units, and if the plea of motor vehicle users is properly presented to the Congress, it should be possible to secure the repeal of this discriminatory tax.—Christian Science Monitor.

United States Silver Production

(Foreign Press Service)

Announcement that a study of possible new uses for silver in the industries and commerce is to be undertaken by the United States Department of the Interior lends interest to some calculations made by the Trade Record of The National City Bank of New York as to the share which the United States produces of the world's silver output and the proportion used in the industrial arts. These figures show that the United States produced in 1922 about twenty-six percent of the silver turned out by the mines of the world as against twenty-six percent in 1910, thirty-three percent in 1900, twenty-nine percent in 1870, twenty-four percent in 1865, and five percent in 1831, the initial year of the recognition of the United States as an important factor in world silver production. Prior to 1860 the United States share of the world's silver production was but a fraction of one percent. In 1860 it amounted to only 115,016 ounces, for the first time crossing the million line in 1867, being for that year 10,441,000 ounces; in 1922 it was 56,240,000 ounces.

Although the United States came late into the field of silver production, the share which it has supplied of the world's outturn of silver from 1924 to the end of 1923 is about twenty-one percent, the total outturn, according to accepted authorities, of that 421 year period having been 13,175,000,000 troy ounces, and the United States outturn since it entered the field ninety years ago 2,735,000,000 ounces, with a commercial value of $2,255,000,000. Prior to the advent of the United States as a silver producer the world outturn averaged about 35,000,000 ounces a year, but with the co-operation of the United States as a silver producer the total world output grew to 43,000,000 in 1870, 126,000,000 in 1890, and 226,000,000 in 1911, dropping during the war period to an average of about 175,000,000 per annum, and in 1922 again crossing the 200 million line, the 1922 output being 213,5542,000 ounces.

While other parts of the world decreased their production during the war the United States output was larger during that period than at any other time, advancing from 66,800,000 ounces in 1913 to 71,700,000 in 1917, dropping a little below 70,000,000 in 1918, and standing at 56,240,000 in 1922.

MEXICO FIRST

The chief silver producing countries of the world are, stated in their order of magnitude of production in 1922, Mexico, the United States, Canada, Peru, Australia, Bolivia, Germany, India, Japan, Spain, and Chile. In the United States the chief silver producing states are, naming them in the order of their output in 1922, Utah, Montana, New Mexico, Colorado, Idaho, Arizona, and California.

The big additions to the world's supply of silver which were running at the rate of over 200,000,000 ounces a year prior to the war and in 1922 again crossed the 200,000,000 line do not necessarily mean a corresponding increase in the world's stock of silver money. A very considerable share of the new silver produced from year to year is now used for purposes other than monetary. Some of it is lost by abrasion, some of it passes to the Orient and disappears in the "hoarde" characteristic among the people of that part of the world. Much of it has been for years in the manufacture of tableware, ornaments and toilet articles, and of late large quantities are utilized in photography especially the thousands of miles of motion picture films annually turned out in the world. While the silver used in tableware, ornaments and toilet articles as looked upon as possibly "recoverable" in case it is needed, that used in photography and plating is not recoverable. A recent statement by a high authority puts the quantity of silver now used in photography and silver plating at from ten to twenty million ounces a year while from twenty to thirty million ounces are annually used in the manufacture of tableware, toilet articles, etc. Accepting the higher of these figures it would appear that about one-fourth of the world's silver production is now used in the arts and industries, and this is sustained by a recent report of the Director of the Mint who states the world's industrial consumption of silver in 1922 at 59,869,000 ounces, or twenty-eight percent of the 1922 world outturn.

Realities In Europe's Revival

BY FRED L. KENT

If we would aid Europe in solving her problems, we must recognise realities, and not be guided by myths. The complexities which exist are those that arise from the inequalities and lack of stability in human nature. They are just that—nothing more and nothing less. And America is peopled with human beings exactly as is Europe.

In the United States we have one principal language and one country, and yet there are many men engaged in trying to play one part of the country against another and in setting up classes which they encourage to destroy each other for some advantage which these agitators, political or otherwise, hope thereby to gain for themselves.

In Europe there are many countries and many languages, and it would seem far more natural for the various races to consider their own welfare before that of others than for men in one country with one language constantly to exercise their every force to depreciate their own countrymen, whose lifework may be different from theirs or who may reside in some other part of their country.

This only goes to show that human nature is much the same everywhere, and that we in the United States of America are in no position to criticise other peoples merely because our domestic problems of the moment are not as great as theirs, and consequently the strain upon us is not as severe as the strain upon them.

But because we should not loosely criticise does not mean that we are warranted in ignoring such facts as may exist, regardless of their cause, and consequently in considering how we can best cooperate with the European nations to bring about peace, we must take into account every element of the problem, and the "state of mind" of those concerned is one of the most important.

Unfortunately there are always those in the world who make it their business to exploit their fellows, and after wars such individuals can more successfully control masses by false promises because the desire for better living conditions exceeds the will to reason.

But in spite of the severity of the war, its loss of life and its devastation, time so dulls the edges of memory and the struggle to live takes so much of men's energy and thought that the underlying conditions in the European countries have been constantly turning from those in despair toward constructive effort.

By this means the latent power of hope, which is the foundation for all forward movements in human affairs, has been slowly built up in many of the countries of Europe At present, however, it is held in check and overshadowed by the great reparations problems and the dying embers of the flame of the Russian terror.

The problems which the war left to men were greater than they could solve without the lessons furnished by the further hardships which resulted from the experiments that have been undertaken in the vain struggle to obtain relief without having to work for it. It was futile to expect that a satisfactory peace could be worked out of such elements as have existed in the European situation until the strain had approached the breaking point. Except for the better underlying conditions, therefore, it was only natural that the problem should assume the very serious aspect which it presents today. At every such point in history the intelligence of the contemporaneous generation is either insufficient to prevent a new catastrophe, or it is great enough to conceive and carry out a settlement.

Europe's need for a settlement of the reparations question is so great that, regardless of how any nation might feel concerning the payment of the interallied indebtedness, the power that such indebtedness might wield in bringing about the much-desired settlement of reparations would be sufficient to force consideration of the question of the reduction of its military, particularly if all of the other debtor nations of Europe were being brought into the proposition at the same time.

There is every reason to believe that the neutral nations of Europe would gladly join in any agreement that might be undertaken by the debtor nations to limit their military on some definite basis, and while Germany and her former allies are limited by the treaties of peace as to the military forces which they can maintain, yet for the sake of the strength that lies in unity of action they should be brought into the situation with the other nations.

While this seemingly leaves out Russia, yet once its rulers see that peace is going to prevail in Europe, such of its leaders as are destructive will rapidly lose their power, which only flourishes upon discontent. We can then confidently look forward to the development of a different attitude in Russia, as its need for a proper association with the other nations would be overwhelming. Such association could only be brought about if Russia was willing to join in the military agreements being undertaken and if she was ready to play an honorable part in the economic affairs of the world, and consequently the co-operation of Russia could be hoped for.

ST. XAVIER'S DEFEAT CLUB SECONDS 4-1

Second League Games Played At Hongkew Park

POLICE BEATEN

Portuguese Sporting Association Vanquishes Jewish Recs

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS
SECOND LEAGUE
St. Xavier 4, S. F. C. 1.
Jewish R. C. 2, Police 0.
Portuguese 5, Hanbury School 1.

BY "WHISTLE"

There were no 1st. League matches yesterday and owing to the Paper Hunt Races the 2nd. League Contests were played at the Hongkew Park.

The Hanbury School team opened the scoring in their match against the Portuguese Eleven who have not yet been beaten this season. This was rather an encouraging start but was short-lived, for the Portuguese soon found their footing and piled up 5 goals before the game was over.

The Jewish R. C. managed to hold their own against formidable Police attacks and won by 2-0.

S.F.C. vs. ST. XAVIER

The first half of this game was rather disappointing. It was a ding-dong struggle, the Club missing several opportunities of scoring owing to individual attempts to break through their opponents defence instead of combining together. A strong cross-wind effected the game to a certain extent and was the cause of much miskicking.

After a lot of pressure the St. Xaviers opened the scoring. Dannenberg managed to find the net with a low shot which gave Harris no chance.

The Club now attacked again and again but somehow were unable to get through which speaks well for the St. Xaviers defence.

During the second half the Club tried hard to equalise and, individually, there were several pretty attempts. Several corners were conceded to both sides but without results. The St. Xaviers finally got away and, in spite of Ewings splendid defence, managed to score two more goals.

The Club now pressed hard, White taking the ball down and passing to Price who put in a splendid shot. St. Xaviers scored one more goal after this making the total 4-1.

SHIELD AWARDED INTER SCHOOL CHESS VICTORS

Boys And Girls Who Took Part In Tournament Attend Ceremony

On Thursday all the boy and girls who took part in the Inter-school Chess Shield Competition met at the Thomas Hanbury School for Boys. C. P. Dawson, Chairman of the Educational Committee, presided and presented the Shield to the winning team from the Thomas Hanbury School. He said that he was an old chess player and gave the girls and boys sound advice.

The Inter-school Chess Competition formed a very suitable means by which girls and boys could meet each other on equal footing. In most out-door games boys often won by reason of their physical strength, but in chess the only way to win was by mental concentration; noticing the weak moves of your opponent, and taking advantage of the least superiority in position. Although the girls had not won the shield so far there was no reason why they should not do so in the future provided they kept up their practice in the games. There were many wet days when it was not convenient to play out of doors, and then the chess board could be brought out and an enjoyable hour or two could be well spent.

The International Chess Club started the movement in 1922 and last year the shield was won by the Public School for Boys. This year the American School had joined for the first time, so that there were five competing teams. The total scores were as follows:

-o- Shanghai Club Bids God's Speed To "Willie" Moule -o-

Mr. Willie Moule was entertained and feted, at the Shanghai Club on Friday night, and the occasion was marked by making a presentation of a loving cup to the gallant sportsman, who for thirty five years has been playing cricket and endearing himself to both old and young. He is leaving shortly for England where he hopes to take a well earned rest. Over thirty years ago he scored the first of his fifteen centuries here. The final he gained last year. Mr. Moule, undoubtedly, is one of the best liked and capable sportsmen who has ever graced this port. The united best wishes of all sportsmen go with him for his future happiness.

RHYMES OF THE TIMES

I dreamed that as I wandered by the way,
Bare Winter suddenly was changed to Spring,
And gentle odours led my steps astray,
Mixed with sound of waters murmuring
Along the shelving Bund, where brokers play
In chariots, the nimble Mex to bring—
And as I gazed upon the Whangpoo stream
Methought this life was little but a dream.

In Nanking Road I saw the violets
Spring up from out the Tramways' digged up earth,
The rickshaw coolies making erstwhile bets
And chaffing with their fares in wanton mirth;
I saw the shroffs out plying for our debts,
The lordly compradore of gen'rous birth
And then amidst my multitudinous fears
I heard a Volstead murmur "Mine's two beers."

Across the ocean's brond and trembling edge
I saw a Labor Party in its stride,
Was dazzled by Macdonald's plank or ledge
And thought upon the workingman with pride,
Forsaw, that Labor standing by its pledge
Would all undaunted to Atopia ride—
The dull grey drab of life was streaked with guld
Fairer than any wakened eyes beheld.

MRS. DOT

The B. W. A. Dramatic Section is to be congratulated upon the success of its latest production—Mrs. Dot. A detailed account of last night's show will be found in another column.

This is the third big show that the British women have to their credit besides a number of one act plays presented. "The Purse Strings" called a couple of good houses to the Olympic; Barrie's delightful play "Alice-Sit-By-The-Fire" was performed to big audiences at the English Country Club and now we have "Mrs. Dot." This brilliant work of Somerset Maugham will be repeated tomorrow and Tuesday.

The play was first produced under the name of "Worthley's Entire" in 1908 at the Comedy Theater. I notice the names of two well-known players in the original cast. The part of Mrs. Worthley was created by Miss Marie Tempest while "Gerald Halstane" was played by Graham Browne.

OLD WOMAN 31

The A.W.C. Dramatic Section has published its cast which includes such experienced players as Mr. and Mrs. Crane. Mr. Schlobohm is well known in A.D.C. circles and has presented many a clever character study. Rehearsals, I understand, are in full swing, and a fine show can be anticipated at the end of the month.

BERNARD SHAW

The A.D.C. has decided to give Bernard Shaw a hearing early in April, and the work is to be "Fanny's First Play." It is full of wit, satire and humor. It is typically Shavian.

A good cast has been chosen and rehearsals are starting right away.

THE QUAINTS

We have been looking forward to the coming of the Quaints for some time past—now they are almost upon us, and Bobby Salisbury and his merry band will say "Howdy" on Friday night at the Lyceum. Their published program looks particularly good. The opening show is entitled "Underground to Anywhere." The company, on Monday 10th, will present the famous "Beggar's Opera."

S'HAI COLLEGE BEATS NANKING AT BASKETBALL

Take First Game In Intercollegiate Series; Score Is 51-20

The Shanghai College basketballers won the first game of the 1924 Intercollegiate Basketball championship series yesterday afternoon when they trounced the quintet from Nanyang College to the tune of 51-20 in the Yangtzepoo gymnasium. The series which was originally to start about a week ago was postponed because of the late opening of some of the colleges after the winter vacation.

The game proved to be an easy walk-over to the Shanghai players. Gaining an early lead in the score, the Shanghai shooters piled up their count steadily, and their score was never once threatened during the forty minutes of play. Norman Ma who played at right forward was the big gun yesterday, shooting at every angle on the floor and having thirteen goals to his credit. T. T. Zee at center showed excellent form, as he scored five times from floor and twice from fouls. Yuen at guard played hard and netted four baskets, while Ling and Wu also showed good form in covering the floor.

For the Nanyang players, M. K. Wong was the outstanding man. He worked well with Chen the center, and they were the only players who showed any shooting ability. The team as a whole was slow and it lacked combination which is so important in basketball.

The summaries:

Shanghai College 51: Henry Ling l.f., Norman Ma r.f., T. T Zee c., Wu Chon l.g., John W. Yuen r.g.

Nanyang College 20: M. K. Wong l.f., Swan Ning r.f., T. Y. Chen c., S. K. Sung l.g., K. F. Chang r.g.

Goals from floor: Ma 13, Zee 5, Wong 4, Chen 5, Wong 4, Sung and Wu 1.

Goals from fouls: Zee 2, Ma 1.

Referee: A. W. Hazard.

Timer: F. F. Tal.

Scorer: G. Y. Wong.

Porter and Jacobson Look To Have Best Chance In Billiards Championship

BY BLUE CHALK

A contemporary, in a recent review, made some pertinent remarks on some of the more prominent entrants for this year's Billiard Championship and ignored the remainder. This is rather unfair, for every entrant on this occasion is worth some passing notice. The following comments on all the players may prove of interest to followers of the game here.

BARRETT

This player has come on tremendously and has worked hard to overcome the weak spot in his game. In fact he has altered his game entirely during the last two seasons and has put up some of the highest breaks in Shanghai lately. He is, however, as tempermental as ever, and if he could only overcome this defect he would be certain of getting into the finals. A very sound and pretty player to watch when things are going right but apt to blow up and go off his game when luck or the balls are not in his favor.

REMEDIOS

A wonderfully attractive player to watch. Is very heady and shows good generalship and a dangerous opponent at any time. Remedios always strikes one as being able to do better than he does. If he would only regain his former enthusiasm for the game and practise constantly he would be in the first flight but as he is at present he will hardly survive his game with Barrett in the first round.

PENNELL

A newcomer who has made a very good impression. Has strung some consistently good runs lately and his experience against Jacobson in the first round should stand him in good stead for next year's tourney.

JACOBSON

The Champion seems as good as ever and shows no inclination, to let any one wrest his crown from him. His eyesight has been bothering him somewhat lately, but Jacobson is expected to come through notwithstanding this ailment. The Champion is mechanically perfect in the accuracy of his losing hazard which is his best scoring shot. As far as the rest of his game is concerned he is not the peer of some of the other players, nor is his style irreproachable, though some of his admirers think otherwise. The writer looks forward to seeing Johnson and Porter fighting it out again in the finals, with the odds just a shade in Porter's favor this year.

CAMPOO

The one outstanding player who has a distinct chance of winning the Championship. Campoo is a finished player in every sense, knows the game thoroughly, has no nerves, and given an even break in the luck of the rolls of the balls is equal to any player in Shanghai. He has been playing brilliantly this season and much is expected of him by his fellow Club members.

PHILLIPS

A very fascinating player to watch. "Phil" is accused of being unorthodox but the criticism is unfounded. All that is wrong with Phillips is his high strung temperment which prevents him from doing justice to himself. The first round between him and Campoo should be well worth seeing as they are probably the most dissimilar players in the Championship. Both players are out for high breaks and can make 'em too, so don't miss the game.

KOMAROFF

This player is the most erratic of all the entrants. When on his game, is the fastest scoring player in Shanghai and can string big breaks in quick succession. Like many other players he is tempermental and his game suffers accordingly. His match with Prince should be a fight for both players have somewhat the same strokes and weaknesses.

PRINCE

The century man. Prince strings hundred breaks as the others do 50's, but the trouble with Prince is that he can only get these breaks on his own table. Prince wants lot of fun and noise whilst he's playing. Silence at a billiard game disturbs him and makes him morose and then he does nothing worthy of him. If Prince could subsidise the rest of the force to foregather at his Championship games and "root" he'd

Good Crowd, Good Racing, At Hunt Club's Meet; "Sweetheart" Pays $277

The Shanghai Paper Hunt club's annual Race meet at the city track yesterday proved a thoroughly delightful affair, with a fine attendance despite the chilly weather and rather strong wind. The track was on the soft order, due to the recent rains, but the ponies seemed to make good time notwithstanding.

The big surprise of the day to the odds layers came in the eighth race, the "Beef Stakes," in which Sweetheart got home first, thereby rewarding his backers with a dividend of $277. This was the best dividend of the day.

Dalmeny, in the last race of the day, beat out The Artful Dodger in the stretch and collected $53.70 for his backers, while Harry M. paid $48.20 in the fourth race, the Club Challenge Cup. The only other dividend of note went to the backers of Red Pepper, ridden by Mr. Sparke, in the Stewards' cup event. This win paid $51.60.

win his games easily, but as this isn't done in the best circles Prince has to suffer in bowing to the conventions of the game.

BOYES

It is some seasons now since Boyes last figured in these games. Boyes is a sound practical player and does not play to the gallery. He is probably the best exponent of the "draw" or "screw" shot in Shanghai and through this shot scores from seemingly impossible positions and angles and merrily continues a break just as his opponent figures Boyes is stumped. Boyes whilst not in the fore front of possible Champions is good enough to knock out a very good man and that's the worst kind of opponent to be up against in Billiards. If he survives his game with Bush, Boyes will be prominent in the rest of the rounds

BUSH

A player whom everyone has a very wholesome respect for. Bush is dangerous at all times. A consistent scorer himself, he takes ultra good care not to give his opponent any more favorable openings than can be helped, and his tactics and strategy have often won him a game from more brilliant players, whom he seems to demoralise. Bush invariably gets into the semi-finals and should do so again this year.

JENSEN

A fast scoring steady player. Not brilliant at any time but maintains a good average. Will give his opponent a hard fight but he has yet to cultivate and improve his game before being in the top notchers class.

HAWKINS

A player of the calibre of Jensen, but is apt to be brilliant at times when things are going right for him. His game with Jensen will be quite a contest and will be well worth watching.

MORRISS

A very classy player, who has a brilliant repertoire of strokes but who has hitherto not done himself justice in the Championship games an account of temperment. Morriss is not at his best when playing before a crowd but he has been striving to overcome this defect and he is expected to show to better advantage this year.

GOMES

A coming player, who has modelled his game and strokes on that of Campos. Needs experience in his games and should be one of the leading players in another year or two.

SHEN

A newcomer with a good record and reputation. Has had, it is said, the benefit of professional coaching at home, so may prove to be an eye-opener to most of us. Is up against Porter in the first round and will probably have to curb his aspiration for Championship honors until next year.

PORTER

The ex-Champion is going like a house on fire and is on the top of his form at present. His recent big breaks have restored his confidence in his ability to make them and he should this year regain the title. Porter is sometimes accused of playing too many fancy shots, but as these are as easy to him as any other, what's the difference as long as you can score and get a position? Porter is the best and prettiest player in China and Jacobson will have to fight hard to retain the title if Porter meets him in the final.

Thomas Hanbury School for Boys 24½ games won.

Public School for Boys 22 games won.

American School 15 games won.

Thomas Hanbury School for Girls 11½ games won.

Public School for Girls 5 games won.

There were four matches played with a total possible score of 32 so that the winning team was to be complimented for only losing seven games.

In addition to the Shield Competitions there was a tournament to find out who was the best player. There were six entries, and the event was won by George Livchitz of the Thomas Hanbury School for Boys who won all his games. This is the second year that he has won this event. Mr. G. O. Jackson, Vice-president of the International Chess Club had kindly given a silver shield for this event, and this was duly presented to the winner.

Mr. Dawson then presented to Mr. J. A. Jackson, Hon. Secretary of the International Chess Club, a chess board of inlaid wood which had been made at the Manual Training Center at the Thomas Hanbury School for Boys. This was presented to Mr. Jackson for his work in promoting the chess tournaments between the various schools.

Sport And Stage

are giving their last two shows. I saw them on Wednesday and thoroughly enjoyed all their work. Very fine dancing is one feature of the show and some really wonderful impersonations is another.

Tomorrow, Tuesday and Wednesday that great picturisation of Blasco Ibanez—"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"—should draw both old and new admirers. The latter part of the week the theater will be occupied by that well known duo of mystery, Chefalo and Palermo.

The ever popular Doug. Fairbanks is at the Isis in "The Nut." Marie Prevost, "The Dangerous Little Demon" will be seen at the Apollo. Pearl White in "The Thief" is at the Victoria—Fine play! The Olympic's special offering is "Checkers."

NOT ONLY IN ENGLAND

Page Shanghai! "In England one of the chief foes of the drama is the English dinner, solemn, solid, and late; a heavy and brain-killing ordeal."

Managers in London have been forced to begin later and later, and often to put on a curtain-raiser, during the performance of which the audience noisily find their places.

The time of beginning caused so much serious reflection that on one occasion the London managers held a meeting, and then sent out a circular letter to a great many people, to enquire whether the dinner could be placed earlier, or the theatre still later in the night. The letter wound up with this question—At what hour should the curtain rise? A large variety of answers came in, some insisting on six, some on seven, and some on nine o'clock. A characteristic response was sent by Bernard Shaw—"For the majority of modern plays, the curtain should not rise at all?"
